OHIO, a large and important river of the U. S., North America, formed by the junction of the Alleghany and Monongahela rivers, at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; has thence a W.S.W. course of 1,038 m., separating the states Virginia and Kentucky on the E. and S., from Ohio, Indiana, and

Illinois N. and W.; and joins the Mississippi at Cairo, near lat. 37° N., lon. 69° W. At Pittsburgh it is about 830 feet above the sea. Near Louisville it passes through a mountain break, and forms rapids, in which it descends 23 feet in 3 m., but these are obviated by a canal navigable for steamers. Its course thenceforth is mostly through a level country, and its current is generally placid, being usually from 2 to 3 m. an hour. At Cincinnati it is 535 yards, and at its mouth about half a mile across; but between October and January annually, and occasionally in summer, it is so augmented by floods that vessels drawing 12 feet of water can then navigate it downwards from Pittsburg. In winter it is annually frozen in the upper part of its course, which causes a suspension of navigation for 8 or 10 weeks. Principal affls. the Big-Beaver, Muskingum, Scioto, Miami, and Wabash from the N., the Kenawha, Sandy river, Kentucky, Green river, Cumberland, and Tennessee from the S. OXFORDSHIRE, a central co. of England, having E. the co. Bucks, N. Warwick and Northampton, W. Gloucestershire, and S. Berks, from which it is wholly separated by the Thames, Shape extremely irregular. Area 766 sq. m., or 488,840 ac., of which upwards of 400,000 are under cultivation. Pop. 170,363. Surface mostly level or undulating, except in the S., where it is traversed by the Chiltern hills. Soil in the N. a fertile loam, elsewhere gravelly or thin, and on a limestone subsoil. Principal rivers, the Thame, Cherwell, Windrush, and Evenlode, affls. of the Thames. Parts of the co. are well wooded. Barley, wheat, and turnips, are the main crops. Dairy produce of excellent quality. Stock of sheep large, especially on the Chiltern range. Minerals of no importance. Manufacts. of lace, gloves, and blankets. The Oxford Canal, 91 m. in length, traverses the co. from N. to S., connecting the Thames with the Coventry Canal, and through it with the Mersey, Severn, and Trent, and a branch of the Great Western Railway extends in the same direction. The co. is divided in 14 hundreds and 203 par., mostly in diocese and circuit of Oxford. Principal towns, Oxford, Banbury, Woodstock, and Henley. The co. sends 8 members to H. of Com., and 6 are sent by its bors. and university. Reg. co. electors (1846) 5,384. The aboriginal inhabitants of this co., the Dobun, are said to have welcomed their Roman conquerors, and always to have lived contentedly under them. Roman remains are numerous in the county.

OXFORD, a city, parl. bor., and the seat of one of the principal universities of England, cap. co. Oxford, between the junction of the Isis and Cherwell, here crossed by numerous bridges, 66 m. W.N.W. London, on the Great Western Railway and branch. Lat. 51° 45' 55" N., lon. 1° 15' 29" W. Area of parl. bor. 2,930 ac. P. 27,243. It stands on an undulating amphitheatre. The High Street, proceeding from E. to W., and entered by a stone bridge over the Cherwell, is a very fine street. In it are Magdalen, All Souls, Queen's and University Colleges, and the university church. At right angles with this street is another line upwards of a mile in length. In this are Christchurch College and the town-hall, and its N. part is very broad, and ornamented with rows of elms. Parallel to High Street is Broad Street, in which are Balliol, Trinity, and Exeter Colleges, the Ashmolean Museum, Clarendon rooms, Seldonian theatre, and near it the academical schools, with the Bodleian library and picture gallery. The cathedral of Oxford, attached to Christchurch college, and on the site of a priory founded in the 8th century, is an edifice of different styles between the 12th and 16th centuries, with a spire 146 feet in height. Its see comprises the co. Oxford, and the archdeaconries of Berks and Bucks. Revenue of bishopric 5,000*l.* St Mary's church, used for academical services, has a spire of 180 feet in height. Carfax or St Martin's is the corporation church. St Peter's in the East is the oldest church in Oxford (supposed about the 9th century); its older parts are Saxon, and it has a crypt of the same architecture. St Mary Magdalen is in the decorated style. St John's, All Saints and St Giles, also deserve notice. In the city are also ten other churches. Besides the colleges, several of which, as Christchurch, New College, All Souls, Magdalen, and Queen's, boast of imposing architecture, other principal buildings are the town and co. hall, music hall, city bridewell, sessions-house, and co. gaol, the market house, Radcliffe infirmary, house of industry for 12 par., many almhouses, and chapels for Roman Catholics, Methodists, Independents, and Baptists. Oxford has diocesan and national schools, numerous charitable endowments, and several banks. It is chiefly supported by its university, but it has some transit trade in coals and corn, facilitated by wharfs and quays on the Isis. It is governed, exclusive of the university, by a mayor, 9 aldermen, and 80 councillors, and is the seat of quarter and petty sessions, a mayor's court, a court of hustings, and of assizes and monthly courts for the co. Corp. rev. 4,670l. It sends 2 members to House of Commons for the town, reg. electors (1847) 2,881; and 2 members for the university, reg. electors 2,758. It is the place of election for members for the co.—THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD consists of 19 colleges and 5 halls, as follows:—University college, reputed to have been founded in 872, revived in 1249; Balliol, founded between 1263 and 1266, and of which Wickliffe was once master: Merton, founded at Malden in Surrey, in 1264, and removed to Oxford in 1274; Foster, founded 1314; Oriel, dating from 1326; Queen's, founded in 1340, and the buildings of which are among the finest in the city; New college, 1380, with the most gorgeous and elegant chapel in the university; Lincoln, founded in 1427; All Souls, 1437, with a noble hall, and a library of 40,000 vols.; Magdalen, 1456, at the entrance of the city from London, with fine Gothic architecture, and a hall that has been the banquetting room of many English sovereigns; Brazen Nose, founded 1509; Corpus Christi, 1516; Christ Church, originally founded by Cardinal Wolsey in 1525, and with by far the most extensive buildings and grounds belonging to any of the colleges, a W. front 382 feet in length, a tower, containing the "Great Tom," a bell, weighing 17,000 lbs., magnificent hall, picture gallery, library, etc.; Trinity, founded 1554; St John's, 1557, with handsome buildings in the N. part of the city; Jesus, founded 1571; Wadham, 1613; Pembroke, 1620; Worcester college, 1714; and St Mary's, New Inn, St Alban, Magdalen, and St Edmund's halls, which two last are unendowed academical houses. Total members (1848) 6,020. The university is governed by its own statutes, administered by a chancellor, a resident vice-chancellor, who is magistrate for Oxford, and the coas. of Oxford and Berks, two proctors, and subordinate officers. The corporate business is conducted by the house of congregation, composed of the resident doctors, heads, and professors of colleges, and the house of convocation, comprising all those whose names remain on the books of the university, whether resident or not. Public professorships are of royal or private endowment; and in all there are 28 professors and readers, some of whom lecture in the "schools," new buildings for which have been lately constructed. The fellowships and scholarships are chiefly reserved for parties who, by birth or interest, rather than learning, acquire a title to them; but at Balliol, Oriel, Lincoln, and Wadham colleges, they have been thrown open to competition. Most of the colleges have exhibitions, with stipends from public bodies elsewhere; and at Christ Church is a body of servitors, similar to the scholars of Cambridge. The Bodleian library, connected with the university, comprised in 1800 220,000 vols., and 30,000 MSS., and is entitled to a copy of all new works published in the United Kingdom. There are besides about 25 other libraries. Total revenues of the university estimated at 457,490l. University College claims to have been founded by Alfred the Great.

It is certain that Oxford was a seat of learning as early as the time of Edward the Confessor. It was a principal residence of numerous Raxon, Danish, and Norman monarchs. In the civil war, the members of its university sided with the king. The university has sent 2 members to House of Commons since the time of Edward I.

PACIFIC OCEAN, a vast watery expanse extending from the Arctic to the Antarctic circle, through 127° of latitude, and between America on the E., and Asia, the Malay Archipelago, and Australia, on the W. In its widest part, at the equator, it is 10,000 m. across; it narrows especially toward the N., where it communicates with the Arctic Ocean by Behring Strait; and including the Indian Ocean, it contains upwards of 70,000,000 sq. m. or more than all the dry land on the globe. Its coast line on the American side, though generally bold, is very little broken by inlets; on the Asiatic side it is very irregular; and the Celebes, China, and Yellow Seas, with the Seas of Japan, Okhotsk, and Kamtschatka, are inlets of this ocean. It is studded with a great number of island groups, the principal of which, proceeding from W. to E., are the Ladrone, Carolines, Solomon, Queen Charlotte, New Hebrides, Feejee, Friendly, Society, Low, Marquesas, Sandwich, and Galapagos islands, and New Zealand, besides a vast multitude of solitary islands, reefs, and sandbanks. The great equatorial current of this ocean originates in the Antarctic drift current, which flows N. along the shores of South America, and then W. through the Pacific, where it occupies the entire space between the tropics. Strong land currents sweep round the shores of E. Australia and Japan. The N.E. trade wind prevails winter-ruptly between lat. 5° and 33° N.; the S.E. trade wind commonly blows from the equator to lat. 26° S., between them is the region of calms, extending over 5°, and varying in position according to the season. Greatest equatorial temperature of Pacific 88° F. Fahr. In lat. 56° 28', the temperature of the sea throughout its depth is 59° F. Fahr. This ocean became first known to Europeans in 1513; it received its name from Magalhães, who sailed across it in 1521. In the 16th century its different parts were explored by Behring, Anson, Byron, Bongaïville, Cook, Vancouver, Broughton, La Perouse, etc. In the present century by D'Entrecasteaux, Krusenstern, Beechey, Fitzyar, D'Urville, Wilkes, and Sir James Ross.

It thence flows mostly S., between the territories of Bolivia and the Plata Confederation on the W., and those of Brazil and Paraguay E. ward; and near Corrientes, lat. 27° 20' S., it unites with the Paraná, the name of which river it afterwards assumes. Total course 2,000 m., throughout nearly all which, from the sea upwards to the influx of the Jauru, it is navigable. It receives from the E. the rivers Porradas and Taguari, from the W. the Sipotaba, Jauru, Galdan, Pileomayo, and Vermejo, and between lat. 17° & 19° S. In 1858 its navigation was opened to ships of every flag.

PARAGUAY, an indep. state of South America, between lat. 17° and 27° S., lon. 54° and 58° W., bounded N. and E. by Brazil, S. by the Paraná, and W. by the Paraguay. Area 75,000 sq. m. Pop. (1855) estimated at 1,200,000. Cap. Asuncion. Surface mountainous in the N.E., where the Sierra Maracay separates it from Brazil; flat in centre, and marshy in S.W. Soil fertile, watered by numerous tributaries of the principal rivers. Chief vegetable products, the yerba mate or Paraguay tea, medicinal herbs, balsams, gums, wax, dye stuffs, hemp, rice, cotton, sugar; and vast forests of useful and ornamental timber. The Spaniards established themselves in Paraguay in 1615. The Jesuits commenced their missions in 1608, and were expelled in 1763. The people rebelled against the Spanish yoke in 1811. Francia was elected dictator in 1817, and until 1844 the country was closed against foreigners. In 1852 the independence of the state was recognised by the Argentine republic, and 1853 by Great Britain.

PARAHIBA or PARAHYBA, two rivers of Brazil. —I. prov. Parahiba, to which it gives name, joins the Atlantic by an estuary, in lat. 7° 8' S., lon. 34° 48' W., after an E. ward course of upwards of 270 m. In summer its bed is dry beyond 20 leagues from its mouth, near which, on its S. b., is the city Parahiba. —II. (do Sul or the Southern Parahiba), provs. San Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, enters the Atlantic at San Jose de Praya, lat. 21° 40' S., lon. 40° 46' W., after an E. course of 500 m. Chief afflu., the Pombal, Muriha, and Parabuno, with which last it forms all the N. boundary of the prov. Rio.

PARAHIBA, a small prov. of North Brazil, mostly between lat. 6° 30' and 7° 30' S., lon. 34° 40' and 38° 40' W., having E. the Atlantic Ocean, and inland the provs. Rio Grande do Norte, and Pernambuco. Area 19,769 sq. m. Pop. 55,124. Surface mostly elevated. Principal rivers, the Parahiba and Mangarape. Chief products, cotton and sugar, with Brazil-wood, drugs, and timber. Cattle of European breeds are numerous. Principal towns, Parahiba, Alhandra, and San Miguel.

PARAHIBA, a maritime city of Brazil, cap. prov., and the centre of its trade, on rt. b. of the Parahiba, near its mouth in the Atlantic, 65 m. N.N.W. Pernambuco. Pop. (including district) 15,000. It consists of a lower and an upper town. The former is the commercial quarter; one of its chief edifices is a government warehouse. In the upper town the streets are wide and well paved, the architecture antiquated. Here are Franciscan and other convents, the principal churches, prison, governor's palace, military arsenal, and treasury. Trade chiefly in sugar, cotton, and Brazil-wood. Near the city are coffee plantations.

PARANÁ, a large river of South America, and one of the principal which contribute to form the Plata, rises by numerous heads in the Brazilian prov. Minas Geraes, between lat. 22° and 28° S., lon. 48° and 46° W., near the sources of the rivers Doce and San Francisco, and less than 120 m. from the Atlantic Ocean. It flows in a S.W. direction, bounding the state Paraguay on the E. and S., and separating it with the Brazilian prov. Mato-Grosso from San Paulo, and the Plata depts. Misiones and Corrientes. Near Corrientes, lat. 27° 28' S., it joins the Paraguay river, and confers its own name on the united stream. Thenceforward its course is generally S. to within 50 m. N. of Buenos Ayres, where it unites with the Uruguay river to form the estuary of the Plata. Total course is at least 2,000 m. In its upper part it receives numerous large affluents, as the Paranahyba, Tiete, Pardo, Parapanema, and Curitiba; but owing to falls, it is navigable only to the island Aipe, 100 m. above its junction with the Paraguay. It contains numerous fertile islands. Below this point it is navigable for vessels of 300 tons, and receives the considerable rivers Salado and Quarto from the W. Few towns border it in its upper part. In the territory of the Plata Confederation, Candelaria, Ita, Itate, Corrientes, Santa Lucia, and Santa Fé, are on its banks. It is also a name of the Rio Negro (Brazil, which see.) A new prov. called Paraná was created in 1834. [For Paraná town, see BAJADA DE SANTA FÉ.]

PARAVAGUA, a maritime town of Brazil, prov. Sao Paulo, cap. comarca, on a bay of same name in the Atlantic, 170 m. S.W. Santos. Pop. 7,000. It is mostly built of stone; its former Jesuits' college is now converted into public offices. Its port is excellent, and fitted for vessels of 400 tons.

PARANAHIBA or PARANAHIBA, a river of Brazil, prov. Goyas, joins the Curumba to form the Parana, 180 m. S. Vila-Boa, after a W.ward course of about 500 m. PARIS, Lutetia, afterwards Parisii, an important city of W. Europe, cap. of France, and of the dep. Seine, situated on both banks of the Seine, and on two islands in its centre. Lat. (of observatory, 193 feet above the sea) 48° 50' 18" N., lon. 2° 20' 24" E. P. (1897) 1,727,419. Mean temperature of the year 61°·3, winter 37°·8, summer 64°·6, Fahr. Mean annual fall of rain, 26 inches; average number of rainy days, 106; days on which snow falls, 12. In 1848, Paris was estimated to contain 45,000 houses, 1,370 streets, 17 avenues, 37 quays, 21 boulevards, 63 alleys, 133 squares and places, 224 passages and galleries, 105 courts, 163 (impasse) closed lanes, 67 barriers, many of which are noble edifices; 20 gates, and 88 bridges. Many new streets are (1848) in course of erection, and extensive arrangements are projected for water supply and drainage. Paris, considerably enlarged by the line of fortifications with which it has recently been surrounded, extends on both banks of the Seine, over a length of 8 m., circumference 22 m. This space is divided into two distinct portions: 1st, that comprised within the old city wall, erected for the collection of the octroi or customs; and 2d, the communes of the banlieue, comprised between the old wall and the line of the new fortifications. The 1st part, which forms the 12 municipal arronds, of the commune of Paris, is, in many parts, covered with splendid monuments, magnificent hotels and gardens. The houses are generally lofty, and built in a uniform style. The new streets are wide, straight, well paved, and lighted with gas; but many of the old streets are narrow and crooked. The Seine, which traverses Paris from E. to W., is lined with spacious quays, and planted with trees. Within the limits of the city, it is crossed by 23 bridges, and receives the small stream of Bievre or the Gobelins, and the Canal de St Martin, which joins those of the Ourcq and St Denis. It here forms two islands, the Île St Louis, and the Île du Cité; on which last is situated the cathedral church of Notre Dame, a gothic building, in the form of a Latin cross, with a magnificent facade, terminating by two square towers 295 feet in height: the Hôtel Dieu, the Palais de Justice, and the Pont-Neuf, which latter connects the island of the city with both sides of the river. This is the largest, and one of the oldest bridges in Paris; in its centre is a bronze statue of Henri IV. The portion of Paris situated on the rt. b. of the river is the most extensive, and contains the greatest number of public offices. It is also the richest and most commercial, its centre being occupied by the bourse (Exchange of France). Among the many splendid edifices of this quarter, are the palace of the Tuileries, long the residence of the kings of France, and the scene of many of its most remarkable events; the palace of the Louvre, appropriated to rich collections of paintings, sculpture, bronzes, antiquities, and prints; the Palais National, the galleries of which are occupied by elegant shops and cafés; the palace of the Elysée Bourbonn; the Hôtel de Ville, and the Church of the Madeleine. Its principal streets and squares are the Place de la Concorde, an immense square, decorated with fountains and statues; Place des Victoires, in which is the Bank of France, and an equestrian statue of Louis XIV; the Place Vendôme, in the centre of which is a triumphal bronze column erected by Napoleon I. Rue de Rivoli, one of the finest streets of the city, now (1855) being extended to the east; Rue de la Paix, and Rue Castiglione. Most of these are in the centre or west of Paris. The chief objects in the east are the Halle-au-Blé, an immense rotunda, with an iron cupola, near which is the Fontaine des Innocens; the column of July, a bronze monument, erected on the site of the Bastille, in honour of those who fell in the revolution of 1830. The finest and most fashionable promenades are the Boulevards and Champs Elysées, at the W. end of which is the triumphal arch of L'Etoile and Bois de Boulogne; Place du Carrousel, Garden of the Tuileries, and in the E., the cemetery of Père-la-Chaise.

The left bank of the river contains the Faubourg St Germain, the principal residence of the oldest nobles; the boulevards are here also planted, but the promenades are not frequented. On this side is the Page Latin, the seat of the principal educational establishments, as the Sor-bonne, College of France, Colleges of St Louis, Louis-le-Grand, Henri IV, Polytechnic School, and the Normal School, inaugurated 1840; the School of Medicine, and Schools of Law. The principal public buildings on this side are the Palace of the Luxembourg, in part appropriated to the exhibition of the works of living artists; Palace of the Fine Arts; the Odeon; Assemblée Nationale; the Palace of the Institute, containing the Mazarine Library; the mint, with a collection of coins, dies, and medals, from the time of Charles VIII; the Pantheon, a colossal edifice, occupying the highest part of Paris, originally designed for a church, but afterwards appropriated to the remains of eminent Frenchmen; the Hôtel-des-Invalides, an immense military hospital, with an elegant dome, in the centre of which is a church containing the tombs of Napoleon I, Turenne, and Vauban. It has a library of 17,000 vols., and a collection of models of fortifications. The military school, situated in a vast open space called the Champ-de-Mars; the botanic garden (Jardin des Plantes), and the celebrated tapestry and carpet manufactory of the Gobelins. This quarter also contains the greater number of hospitals, the largest of which, the Salpêtrière, has upwards of 6,000 inmates. Here are also the ruins of the Palais des Thermes, and the Hôtel Clugny, founded by Dusommerard, and purchased by the State, containing a museum of arts, arms, and antiquities; the abattoirs (slaughter-houses) of Grenelle and Villégis, and the artesian well. [GUY-WEILL.] A great portion of this quarter was built from quarries, extending under the river, which formed the celebrated catacombs used as a deposit for the bones found in the cemeteries at the time of their suppression. The space contained between the city wall and the fortified circle is composed of the communes of the banlieue, in which the population has greatly increased within a few years, but the greater part of it is still occupied by fields or gardens. These communes comprise on the right bank Bercy, Charenton, Belleville, La Vilette, La Chapelle, Montmartre, Les Batignolles, Fassey, and Anteuil; and on the left bank Grenelle, Vaugirard, Montrouge, and Gentilly. The approach to the new walls is defended by thirteen detached forts, viz., Bouainville, Nolay, Rosny, Nogent, Charenton, and the castle of Vincennes on the E.; Bicêtre, Montrouge, Vanvres, and Issy, on the S.; Mont Valerien, on the W.; Anbervilliers, and St Denis with the Couronne de la Briche, and double Couronne on the North.

Considered in reference to its scientific, literary, and educational establishments, Paris surpasses all the cities of the world; the chief of these are, the college of France, with 28 professors; the university academy of Paris, comprising the schools of law and medicine, having in 1848, 7,600 pupils; there being for law, 3,000 for medicine 3,000, and for the sciences 1,500 pupils; the normal school of literature and science, the polytechnic school, celebrated for the great men it has educated, with 13 professors and a library of 26,000 volumes; school of mines with a laboratory. The observatory containing a valuable collection of astronomical and mathematical instruments; the Jardin des Plantes, a large botanic garden with museums of natural history, and a collection of living animals; conservatory of arts and trades, containing models and descriptions of machinery. Paris is the seat of numerous learned and other societies, among which are the society for the encouragement of national industry, societies of agriculture, geography, geology, statistics, and antiquities. There are 32 libraries in Paris 9 of which are public; of these the great national library (Bibl. Imperial), is a magnificent institution. It is divided into 5 sections, containing in 1846—I. Printed works and pamphlets, 1,400,000 including duplicates.—II. Manuscripts, 125,000 vols.—III. Medals and antiquities, 150,000 medals and 10,000 gems.—IV. Prints, 1,300,000.—V. Maps and charts, 800,000. The benevolent institutions comprise a deaf-mute institution, with 12 professors, a school for the blind, a government pawn bank, and numerous civil, maternity, founding, and orphan hospitals. The principal theatres are the Opera or Academy of music, Theatre Francaise, opera Comique, Odéon, Italian theatre, and 14 minor theatres; an olympic circus, panoramas, diorama, and géorama. The industrial establishments of Paris embrace all kinds of manufactures and commerce, but it is especially distinguished for objects of taste and fashion,—furniture, jewellery, trinkets, bronzes, porcelain, clocks and watches, painted paper, perfumery, bonnets, gloves, and carriages. The carpets and tapestries of the Gobelins are held in high estimation, and Paris is celebrated for its mathematical and optical instruments. It is one of the chief centres in Europe for the production of works connected with literature and the fine arts. In 1846, it had 24 daily journals, 11 advertising papers, 262 periodical sheets of journals, reviews, bulletins, and annals of politics, literature, science, arts, and fashions. The commerce of Paris is facilitated by navigation on the Seine, by its connection with many canals, and by railways to many chief towns of France. [FRANCE.] It has a chamber of commerce with a commercial library, an exchange which publishes daily returns, and it is the seat of all the principal financial, industrial, and commercial societies in the country. Among the eminent persons that Paris has produced may be mentioned the great Condé, Prince Eugène of Savoy, Rousseau the poet, Thou the historian, Molière, Boileau, Voltaire, Rollin, d'Alembert, the painters Lebrun and David, the geographer d'Anville, Lavoisier, Madame Roland, and Madame de Staël. Paris was a place of importance in the time of Cæsar; it was then confined to the island in the Seine, now called the Ile du Cité, and was cap. of that part of Gaul occupied by the Parisii. Under the Roman emperors it was greatly extended. Clovis fixed his empire here in 508. The establishment of the university, in the year 1200, gave it great importance; it was surrounded by walls under Philip Augustus; the inner or city wall (d'Ostroi) was built nearly as it now stands, in 1788. The new line of fortifications was commenced in 1840, and finished in 1849. Paris was delivered up to the English in 1420, and held by them for six years. The allied army entered it in 1814-15. The first revolution began 14th July 1789; the second 27th July 1830; and the third on 23d February 1848, and in 1851 Louis Napoleon, at that time President of the Republic, appealed to the people, and was elected Emperor by a vast majority of votes.

P. the great wall of China. Lat. of imperial observatory $39^{\circ} 54' 13''$ N., lon. $118^{\circ} 28' 54''$ E. Mean annual temperature $54^{\circ} 8'$; winter $36^{\circ} 7'$, summer $81^{\circ} 1'$, Fahr. Pop. estimated at 2,000,000. It consists of two contiguous cities, each separately encircled by lofty walls, and together entered by 16 gates, and occupying an area of from 25 to 26 sq. m., though much of this space is occupied by gardens and enclosures, the houses seldom being more than one storey in height. The S., or Chinese city, the seat of commerce, and residence of the majority of the pop., is intersected throughout by 4 wide and regular thoroughfares, which abound with shops of all descriptions, and are continually filled with a motley crowd. At the points where these streets meet each other, are large arches; but except these, and a temple to the god of agriculture, there would seem to be no edifices in this quarter deserving notice. The houses are of brick, with red-tiled roofs, and the city is unpaved and un drained. The Northern, Tartar, or imperial city, consists of 3 separate enclosures. The outer of these, formerly appropriated to the Tartar garrison, is now mostly occupied by Chinese traders; but it contains 5 of the supreme tribunals of the empire. The 2d enclosure (Hwang-Ching, "the august city"), is 6 m. in circuit, and entered by 4 large, and several smaller, gates. In it are extensive public granaries, a military arsenal, and seminary; the college and buildings of the Russian embassy, an astronomical and a magnetic observatory, the great temples of ancestors, and of peace, the latter having attached to it an institution for Buddhist lamas; the national college of China, and the residences of the great dignitaries of the empire. The inner enclosure, or "forbidden city," with walls 2 m. in circumference, faced with yellow tiles, and surrounded by a moat faced with masonry, is appropriated to the public and private palaces of the emperor and empress, and has a magnificent temple of the imperial ancestors, pavilions, gardens, a lake, and an artificial mountain. Outside of both cities are open suburbs; and Peking has, besides its numerous temples and pagodas, a fine mosque, a Greek church and convent, and a Roman Catholic chapel. About 10 m. W.N.W. is an imperial park, covering at least 12 sq. m., and containing 30 palaces of the emperor and great officers of state. Peking has a large printing and book-selling trade, and manufs. of coloured glass, idols, and other articles; but its inhabitants chiefly depend for subsistence on employment connected with the court. The Pei-ho is navigable for boats to within 20 m., and communicates with the grand canal, by which most of the provisions for the supply of the city are conveyed.

PERREYBURG, a vill., U. S., North America, Ohio, at the head of the steam-boat navigation on the Maumee, 118 m. N.N.W. Columbus. Pop. 1,780.—II. a township of New York, co. Cattaraugus. Pop. 1,863.

PERREYBURG, a town, Burmesa dom. [BASSEIN.] PERREYBURG, a river of Prussian Pomerania, rises near the vill. Perreysburg, and after a N.W. course of 70 m., enters the Baltic at Colberg. It is navigable for the last 18 miles of its course.

PERREYBURG, Isakhar and Tukhti Jemehid, the anc. cap. of Persia, the traces of which exist in a fine plain, prov. Fars, on an aff. of the Bundumir river, from 25 to 80 m. N.E. Shiraz. Its ruins cover a wide surface; and on a terraced platform, 1,430 feet in length, and from 800 to 900 feet in width, are large gateways, numerous columns, and bas-reliefs, the whole supposed to be the remains of the palace of Darius, destroyed by Alexander the Great. The walls are covered with inscriptions in arrow-headed characters, and numerous tombs are cut in the adjacent mountains.

PERREYBURG, a town, Europ. Turkey. [PAUSKEND.] PERREYBURG, a market town of England, co. and 84 m. S.E. Worcester, on the navigable Avon. Area of its two pas. 12,910 ac. Pop. 4,886; of town 2,717, partly engaged in manuf. of hosiery. It is the polling place for E. division of co., and the head of a poor-law union.

PERSSIA IRAN, a country of W. Asia, comprising, in its widest acception, the region between the Caspian Sea and the Indian Ocean, from the Oxus and Indus to Kurdistan and the Persian Gulf. Its boundaries have undergone many changes, but it is now politically divided into Western Persia, or doms, of the Persian Shah, whose cap. is Tehrann, and Eastern Persia or Cabool. Persia Propriè between lat. 26° and 40° N., lon. 44° and 61° E., having W. Asiatic Turkey, N. the Russian gov. Transcaucasia, the Caspian Sea, and the desert of Khwarezm (Khiva), E. Afghanistan and Beloochistan, and S. the Arabian Sea and Persian Gulf. Area estimated at 450,000 square miles. Population not more than 8,000,000.

The following are the great divisions of the country:—

Modern Names.	Ancient Names.	Chief Towns.
Aserbaïjan	Media Atropatene	Tebars
Iran Ajam	Media Magna	Schiras
Archieu	Zarudis	Schiras
Luristan	Syr-Madr	Schiras
Chuzestan	Susa	Schiras

the central part (Iran-Ajam), and the greater portion of Fars) is a table land. Average height from 2,500 to 3,500 feet above the sea, but traversed by mountain ranges rising to upwards of 7,000 or 8,000 feet, and bounded N. by the Elburz chain, prolonged from Azerbijan E. to the Paropamisian mountains in Afghanistan, and S. by another chain stretching from Koordistan E. to the mountains of W. Beloochistan. This table land contains in its W. part many irrigated and fertile tracts, but nearly all the E. part of Persia is a wide and irremediable salt desert, forming a portion of that feature and sterile zone which extends from the Atlantic throughout the Sahara of Africa, Arabia, Central Asia, and Mongolia, to the mountains on the N. frontier of the Chinese empire. S. of the table land, also, in the provs. bordering on the Persian Gulf, the country is mostly parched up and barren, and the heats of summer are almost insupportable. The absence of sufficient water is one of the great disadvantages suffered in Persia. Except the Aras, forming the N.W. frontier, the Sefid-rood and Gurgun, which enter the Caspian Sea, the Kerah, Karun, Jerahi, etc., affls. of the Tigris and Shat ul-Arab in Khuzistan, and the Bundemir in Fars, the rivers are quite insignificant, and by far the greater portion of the country is arid and unproductive. Azerbijan and the Caspian provs. must however be excluded from this general description. N. of the Elburz mountains the country is covered with dense forests of oak, elm, and beech, interspersed with fine pastures, and numerous orchards and vineyards. The climate of these provs. is similar to that of Europe, the grains common in which continent, with rice, are plentifully raised. Besides grain, the principal products of Persia are cotton, tobacco, silk, gall-nuts, madder, yellow berries, opium, gum-ammoniac, assafetida, and other drugs; wool, wine, rose water, saffron, dates and other fruits. Copper mines have been wrought in some of the N. provs., and lead mines in Fars and Kerman. Near Nishapoor are some famous mines of Turquoise, a gem peculiar to Persia. Rock salt is abundant in most parts of the country, and salt is also procured from the waters of Lakes Urmiah and Bakhtegan. Coal, iron, naphtha, and galls, are other chief mineral products. Domestic animals include most of the species common in Europe, with the camel, wild ass, and argali sheep. The breeds of horses are very superior, sheep are everywhere abundant, and with cattle they compose the principal wealth of the wandering tribes of Moguls, Turks, Uzbeks, and Kurds, who dwell in all the outlying provs. of the kingdom. Principal manufactures are of silk fabrics, of all kinds; in the chief cities, shawls of goat's hair, especially in Kerman, carpets, felts, cotton cloths, cutlery, and arms, glass, pottery, leather, and saddlery. Commerce extensive, notwithstanding the absence of any roads but mule-tracks. It is chiefly with the adjacent countries, with Russia, by way of the Caspian, and with British India and England by way of the Persian Gulf. Exports consist of the native products already enumerated, with copper wares, saffron, specie, skins and furs. Imports from India are indigo, chintzes, muslins, calicoes, gold and silver brocade, gun, chinaware, sugar, shawls, and metals; from Turkey, European goods and specie; from Russia, iron, broadcloth, calicoes, gold lace, and manufactured goods, tea, quicksilver, and furs; from England, woollen and cotton fabrics, shawls, jewellery, arms, cutlery, watches, and metallic wares. A large proportion of the British cottons imported at Trebizond on the Black Sea is intended for the Persian markets. Principal parts of Persia are Bushkin and Gombroon, on the Persian Gulf, and Rosell, Beltrush, and Astarabad, on the Caspian Sea. Government despotic. The shah is assisted by a grand vizier, who exercises control over the military and foreign departments, and by a lord high treasurer, who superintends the revenue and some arrangements. Each prov., or important dist. of a prov., is governed by a beglerbeg, usually a prince of the blood, or a nobleman of high rank, who appoints kahans over the subordinate dists. Each town and village has its magistrate, who is generally chosen by the people. Annual revenue of the shah, chiefly derived from land and capitation taxes, custom duties, tribute from wandering races, etc., has been estimated at from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000. The pop. is very mixed. The Parsees, who appear to preserve more fully than the rest a purity of descent from the ancient Persians, are now nearly confined to the city of Yezd, and some towns in Kerman, where they still retain fire-worship. The pop. of the towns and settled dists. generally is a race descended from Persians, Turks, Tartars, Georgians, Armenians, Arabs, and all the other nations who have at different periods held sway in the country. They are Mohammedans of the Shieah sect, rejecting the authority of the three first caliphs, on which and other accounts, there is between them and the Turks, Arabs, Bokharae, and most other Mussulmans, a perpetual feud. A few years back, the United Presbyterian Church in Scotland had the Scriptures translated into the Persian language, and sent them with two agents into that country for circulation. The Persians are a handsome, active, and generally warlike people. The nomadic tribes consist of Arabs in the S.; Turkmans, Moghuls, Uzbeks, in the E. and N.E.; and Kurds in the W. They dwell in tents, subsisting on the produce of their herds, and on plunder; and they furnish most part of the armed force, which is very variable in amount, but has been estimated lately at 80,000 men. In 1856, Persia having sided on Herat, war was proclaimed by the British, who took possession of Karak, Bushire, and Mahammerah, but a peace was concluded in March 1857.

PERDIA, two townships, U. S., North America, the principal in Missouri, co. Boone. Pop. 2,222.

PERSIAN GULF, an arm of the Indian Ocean, between Arabia and Persia. Lat. 24° to 30° N., lon. 45° to 55° 30' E. Length 550 m., breadth varies to 220 m. At its N.W. extremity it receives the Shat-ul-Arab, formed by the union of the Euphrates and Tigris rivers, and the Karun. It communicates on the E. with the Arabian Sea by a strait 50 miles across. It contains numerous islands, the principal being Kishm, Ormaz, Bushsheh, and Karak, off its N. or Persian coast, and the East India Company's and Bahrain islands, on its Arabian side, around which last named an extensive pearl fishery is carried on. Shores almost every where arid and sterile. On them are the cities Basorah and Bushire, and the towns Congoo, Neckloo, Gombroon, Zaberah, El Khatif, and Grane.

PERSON, a co. of the U. S., North America, in N. of North Carolina. Area 400 sq. m. Pop. 10,778.

PERTABPORE, a town of British India, presid. Bengal, dist. and 25 m. E. Midnapoor.

PRATERHALL, a pa. of England, co. and 11 m. N.N.E. Bedford. Area 1,680 ac. Pop. 400.

PASTH, a city, royal, pavl, and music bar, town, seat of a presbytery and synod, and formerly the metropolis of Scotland, cap. co., is a plain on rt. h. of the Tay, here crossed by a bridge 880 feet in length, 33 m. N.N.W. Edinburgh, lat. 56° 23' 50" N., lon. 5° 26' 20" W. Pop. of city, including 4 par. 3,332; do. of royal burgh 14,681; do. of par. bor. 33,835. It is partially enclosed by wooded hills. On the N. and S. sides are two spacious parks called Jacks. Principal public edifices, the church of St. John, supposed to have been originally erected in the 8th century, with a square tower 155 feet in height, and divided into three distinct places of worship, numerous other churches and chapels, the public reservoir, co. buildings, central model prison for Scotland formerly a depot for prisoners of war, co. infirmary, lunatic asylum, large barracks, the Marshall monument appropriated to the public, with a large library, the museum of the Perth literary and antiquarian society, town-hall, and king James VI. hospital. Perth has an educational seminary, an elegant structure, a grammar school, an academy, and several other endowed schools, 4 weekly newspapers, 2 local and 4 branch banks, and a custom-house. The Tay is navigable to the city for vessels of considerable burden, and extensive works have been undertaken for forming a new harbour and wet-dock. The general terminus of the Edinburgh and Perth, the Central, the Scottish Midland, and the Dundee, Perth, and Aberdeen, Railways, an elegant building, is situated in the W. suburbs; and the Dundee Railway crosses the Tay by a wooden bridge. Principal manufactures are those of coloured cotton stuffs, gingham, shawls, etc., and here are flax-spinning mills, bleachfields, distilleries, breweries, corn-mills, and iron foundries, rope-walks, tanneries, and dye-works. The glove trade has declined. Ship building is extensive and increasing, and the salmon fisheries in the Tay are very valuable, about 225 tons of fish being sent to London annually. Other principal exports are manuf. goods, corn, and potatoes. Registered shipping (1851) 5,385 tons; and 125 vessels entered, aggregate burden 11,266 tons. Number cleared out 303 ships, burden 16,721 tons. It has 2 weekly markets, and 5 annual fairs. Races take place on the North Inch park. Corporation rev. (1849) 5,2732. The bor. sends 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 1,041. About 2 m. N. of the city is Scone, long a royal residence. Perth was an important station under the Romans, at the meeting of three great highways, and it has some remains which have been attributed to Agricola, with various ruins of ecclesiastical buildings. It was also frequently resorted to by the Scottish kings, and was the scene of many historical events. Its vicinity is very fertile.

PERTHSHIRE, a large and important co. of Scotland, occupying its centre, having N. the co. Aberdeen and Inverness, W. Argyle, S. Dumfries, Stirling, Clackmannan, and Kinross, E. Fife, Forfar, and the Firth of Tay. Excluding a detached district on the Firth of Forth, it is of a compact circular form; length and breadth about 60 m. each. Area estimated at 2,638 sq. m. or 1,666,320 ac., of which upwards of 1,000,000 ac. are arable or pasture, but according to other authorities, the area above given is much below the truth. Pop. 138,660. Surface extremely diversified, comprising both a highland and a lowland region. The Grampians extend through it in a N.E. direction, and are composed of granite and primary slate. Principal mountains, Benlawers 3,945 feet, Ben-More, 3,944 feet in height, and many of the other principal summits in Scotland in the dists. Athol, Breadalbane, Strathern, Strathmore, and Stormont. The S. and lower part of the co. is intersected by the Ochil and Sidlaw Hills, which are of greenstone. The principal lochs are Lochs Tay, Earn, Rannoch, and Erchie. Perthshire is wholly drained by the Tay, and its afflu. the Earn, etc., except its S. part, which is watered by the Teith, Allan, and Devon. The Carse of Gowrie, on the Tay, is a deep alluvial clay, and very productive; the soil in the mountain districts is mostly light, and chiefly adapted for pasturage, sheep and cattle breeding being extensively followed. Agriculture has greatly improved, and wheat, barley, oats, beans, potatoes, turnips, and fruits, are raised for exportation. Farms vary in size from 50 to 500 ac. A large part of the co. has within the last century been planted with woods. Some coal is raised in the S.E., limestone, sandstone, marble, and slate are generally abundant, and lead is found in some places. Manuf., except at Perth, are not very flourishing; the principal are of linen, cotton, and woollen stuffs, leather, and paper. Railways traverse the E. part of the county, and communicate with Edinburgh, Stirling, Perth, and Dundee, N. to Aberdeen. Perthshire is subdivided into 79 parishes. Principal towns, Perth, Crieff, and Dumblane. It sends 1 member to House of Commons. Registered electors (1848) 4,287.

PERTH, a dist. of West Australia, intersected by lat. 32° S., lon. 116° E., having W. the Indian Ocean, and on the other sides the dists. Twiss, York, and Murray. It is watered by the Swan River, which has, 10 miles from its mouth, the town of Perth, cap. of the colony.

PERTH, a township of Upper Canada, British North America, dist. and 40 m. W. Johnstown, on an affluent of the Rideau. [AMBOY.]

PERTHUIS, a comm. and market town of France, dep. H.-Marne, 16 m. N.W. Vassy. Pop. 725.—Perthois was an old dist. of France, cap. Vitry-le-François. It now forms parts of the depts. Marne and Haute-Marne.

PERTUIS, a comm. and town of France, dep. Vaucluse, near the Durance, 38 m. E.S.E. Avignon. Pop. 4,766.

PERTUIS BAÏRON and PERTUIS D'ANTIOCHE are straits which separate the island Ré from the W. mainland of France, dep. Charente-Inférieure, and from the island Oléron.

PERTWOOD (UPPER), a pa. of England, co. Wilts, 2 m. N.W. Hindon. Area 600 ac. P. 29.

PERU (NORTH and SOUTH), a republic of South America, between lat. 3° 30' and 22° S., lon. 68° and 81° 20' W., having N. the Ecuador republic, E. and S. the territories of Brazil and Bolivia, and W. the Pacific Ocean. Area 680,000 sq. m. It is divided into the following 11 departments:—Amazonas, pop. 43,074. Ancasco, pop. 219,145. Arequipa, pop. 119,396. Ayacucho, pop. 132,921. Cuzco, pop. 349,718. Huancavelica, pop. 70,117. Junin, pop. 222,949. Libertad, pop. 266,553. Lima, pop. 260,801. Moquegua, pop. 61,432. Puno, pop. 2-5,681. Also two provs.—I. Callao, pop. 8,455.—II. Piura, pop. 76,892. Total pop. (1852) 2,106,492. The double Cordillera of the Andes traverses Peru from S.E. to N.W., separating it into three regions.—I. "La Costa" on the coast, between the base of the Andes and the Pacific, mostly an arid desert, extending 1,600 m. in length, and rarely more than 60 m. in breadth.—II. "La Sierra" or Andine division, embracing all the valleys on the Pacific side of the W. Andes, above the level of 7,000 feet, including the hills and valleys between the double Cordillera chains.—And III. "La Montana" height. Principal rivers, the Marañon, Huallaga, and Ucayali with the Apurimac, all having a N. ward course, and tributaries to the Amazon, which waters most part of the N. frontier. About half of the Lake Titicaca is comprised in South Peru. The whole coast region is arid and destitute of timber; and only the Piura river in this division is at all navigable. Rain rarely falls in the coast valleys of Peru W. of the Andes, but fogs and dews are frequent. Climate on the coast sultry and unhealthy, but higher up mild and salubrious. On the E. slopes of the Peruvian Andes rain falls copiously. Soil in the valleys of the upland region highly fertile, and here the grains of Europe are successfully raised. Extensive pastures also exist in this region, where sheep introduced by Europeans have been acclimated, and multiply with amazing rapidity. The vast plains E. of the mountains have been but imperfectly explored; they appear to be in great part covered with dense forests. In the hotter portions of the country, sugar, maize, cotton, indigo, tobacco, yams, sweet potatoes, cocoa, and fine fruits, with cinchona bark, sarsaparilla, copaiba, vanilla, and other drugs, and valuable timber, are principal products. The mines of Peru are the principal source of its wealth. The silver mines of Cuzco de Pasco are the richest in the republic. The other chief mines are at Yauricocha, Cayas, Tachaucho, Parajero, and Chausamarca. The average annual product from 1826 to 1835, was 8,333,712 francs; and from 1836 to 1846, it has averaged 12,000,000 francs. Besides the precious metals, it produces iron, copper, tin, coal, & nitrate of soda. The Sierra, between the two ridges of the Andes, is rich in mines; and at Huancavelica is a celebrated mine of quicksilver. The llama, alpaca, guanaco, and vicuña, are natives of the country, and the first especially is used as a beast of burden; mules are, however, mostly employed for travelling. Coarse cotton and woollen cloths and leather goods are generally made, with fine cloaks and blanketing, at Tarma; iron wares at Caxamarca; gold and silver articles, and jewelry, at Lima, Arequipa, and Cuzco; but in general manufactured goods are imported from Europe and North America, in return for raw produce. The want of roads interposes great obstacles to internal traffic; though, since the independence of Peru, a trade has been carried on with the Brazilian dists. on the Amazon, by way of the Huallaga, down which cotton, gums, resins, sarsaparilla, and wax, are exported. The maritime trade is chiefly with the ports on the W. side of America, but that with Europe is considerable, the exports thither consisting of bullion, bark, chinchilla skins, cotton, copper ore, vicuña, alpaca, sheeps' wool, hides, and sugar. In addition, a good deal of produce from Ecuador and Central America reaches Great Britain, by way of Peru; and, since 1841, a trade has sprung up in guano, of which article 95,063 tons were imported into England from Peru in 1850. In 1851, the quantity of calicoes exported from Great Britain amounted to 23,395,194 yards. Principal commercial ports are Callao, Islay, Paita, Lambayeque, Truxillo, Pisco, Arica, & Iquique. The constitution was framed in 1828, on the basis of that of the United States. The legislative body consists of a senate, and a chamber of deputies, one of the latter chosen for every 20,000 inhabitants by electoral colleges composed of one elector for every village of 200 inhabitants. The executive government is vested in a president, popularly chosen for four years, and assisted by a ministry chosen by himself, and a council of state chosen by the legislature. Each dep. has a prefect, and a junta composed of two members from each of its provs. In every prov. is a sub-prefect; in each of its dists. a justice of peace, and in each town, or Indian comuna, a mayor. Every village entitled to name an elector of deputies, has a municipal body. With a few exceptions, every Peruvian enjoys the rights of citizenship. The Roman Catholic is the state religion. Standing army 3,000 men. Public debt has been stated at 20,000,000 piastres. Peru was conquered from the dynasty of the Incas by the troops of Pizarro in 1532, from which time it remained one of the most important foreign possessions of Spain, until it acquired independence in 1821.

PERU, several townships, U.S., North America. —I. Ohio, 93 m. N. Columbus. Pop. 1,832. —II. New York, 10 m. S. Plattsburg. Pop. 3,640. —III. Maine, 40 m. N.W. Augusta. Pop. 1,109. —IV. Indiana, cap. co. Miami, on the Wataah and Erie Canal, 90 m. N. Indianapolis. P. 1,268.

PERUGIA, Perusia, a city of Central Italy, Pontifical States, cap. deleg., 10 m. E. of the Lake of Perugia, on the S. declivity of the Apennines. Pop. (1848) 19,400. It is enclosed by walls. Public buildings comprise a cathedral, with several paintings, and a library of rare MSS., upwards of 100 other churches, and 50 monastic establishments; a city hall, an exchange, now disused; an academy of fine arts, several private palaces, a well endowed university, with museums of antiquities and minerals, and a botanic garden, a college, public library, hospital, and lunatic asylum, 2 theatres, a ball-court, and bull-ring, a splendidly sculptured fountain, and 2 celebrated gates of Etruscan architecture. Perugia has little commercial industry beyond a few soap-works, distilleries of brandy and liqueurs, and trade in wine, oil, corn, fruits, and other provisions; but its fairs in August and November, for cattle and merchandise, are frequented by a concourse of people from all parts of Central Italy, and numerous visitors are attracted to the city by its agreeable society and abundant works of art. —The Lake of Perugia (Ital. Trasimeno), 10 m. W. Perugia, is situated in a basin enclosed on every side by the Apennines. It is about 30 miles in circumference, surrounded by gentle eminences covered with oak, pine, and olive plantations, and it contains three islands.

PERUWILL, a town of Belgium, prov. Hainaut, cap. cant., near the French frontier, 16 m. W.N.W. Mons. Pop. 7,378. It has breweries, lime burning works, and some linen manufactures.

PERWOTUR, a town of India, Decan, Nizam's dominions, 83 m. S.E. Hyderabad. It has some remarkable pagodas.

PERARO, Pisaurum, a fortified town of Central Italy, Pontifical States, deleg. and 19 m. N.E. Urbino, on the Foglia, at its mouth in the Adriatic. Pop. about 12,000. It has a cathedral, and numerous other churches, a legate's palace, a public library, convents, two hospitals, a foundling asylum, and theatre.

PERADORSKE, isle, China Sea. [PERE-HOU.]

PERCIB, a river of S. Italy. [ATERN.]

PERCIB, Aternum, a fortified town of Naples, prov. Abruzzo-Citra, at the mouth of the Aterno, in the Adriatic, 8 m. N.E. Chieti. Pop. 2,400.

PERCIB and PERCIB, two market towns of Naples. —I. prov. Molise, 4 m. E.N.E. Isernia. Pop. 1,500. —II. prov. Capitanata, 11 m. W. Viesti. Pop. 1,500.

PERCHIERA, Piacenza, a fortified town of Austria, Lombardy, deleg. and 21 m. N.N.W. Mantua, on the Minio, here crossed by a bridge, at its base from the Lago di Garda. Pop. 2,065. It has a citadel, two parish churches, a convent, hospital, arsenal, and a port, with a trade on the lake, and an active fishery, especially of eels. It was taken by the Sardinian troops under Charles Albert, 30th May 1848.

Pistoia, a town of Italy, Tuscany, prov. and 30 m. W.N.W. Florence. Pop. 4,786. It is situated among olive-groves and mulberry plantations, is enclosed by walls, and has a cathedral, and three convents, a large hospital, a citadel, & important manuf. of paper, woollen cloth, and silk twist.

Pescara, a town of Naples, prov. Abruzzo-Ult. It. 11 m. E.S.E. Avezzano, on the E. side of the Lake Fucino. Pop. 3,000. It has a fine cathedral.

Pescò, several towns of Naples.—I. (Costanzo), prov. Abruzzo Ultra II, dist. and 13 m. S.E. Sulmona. Pop. 2,500.—II. (La-Messa), prov. Principato Ultra, dist. and 15 m. W.N.W. Ariano. Pop. 1,900.—III. (Pagano), prov. Basilicata, dist. and 17 m. S.W. Melit. Pop. 4,000.—IV. (Selido), prov. Terra di Lavoro, dist. and 3 m. N.E. Sora, at the foot of the Apennines. Pop. 2,500.

Peset, a comm. of the Sardinian dom., prov. Tarentina, 18 m. E.N.E. Moudiera. Pop. 1,700. Here are the largest lead mines in Savoy, which, late in the 18th century, yielded annually 40,000 cwt. of lead, and 4,000 marcs of silver, but are now less productive.

Peshawar, a frontier city of Afghanistan, but now forming a part of the Punjab dom., 12 m. E. of the Khyber Pass, and 40 m. W. Attock. Pop. about 56,046. It was taken and ruined by Bunjeet Singh during the present century, and has never yet recovered prosperity, much of it still remaining in ruins. Its only remarkable edifices, besides its desecrated mosques, are a caravanserai, now the residence of the Sikh governor, and a Sikh fort on the site of its ancient citadel. It is well furnished with water, has a fertile neighbourhood, and since its occupation by the British, its trade is rapidly increasing. The prov., 65 m. long, and 50 m. broad, watered by the Indus, Cabool, and Bara rivers, is extremely fertile, producing, by the aid of irrigation and a high temperature, 2 crops in the year, consisting of wheat, barley, pulse, and the finest rice in the world. It was formerly very populous, but has suffered great devastation from the Sikhs. Annual revenue 1,000,000 of rupees, or 100,000*l*.

Peshawar, a prov. of the British principality of the Punjab, between the Indus above and below Attock and the Khyber Mountains, through which is the Khyber Pass. It is situated between lat. 33° 45' and 34° 30' N., lon. 71° 35' and 72° 42' E. Area 2,400 sq. m. Soil fertile and well cultivated. Principal crops, rice, wheat, barley, maize, millet, sugar-cane, ginger, tobacco, cotton, vegetables, and fruit. Temperatures in summer ranges from 110° to 115° Fahr. in the shade, but is at times mitigated by breezes from the mountains. Chief rivers, the Indus and Cabool, with their tributaries. Irrigation is procured by means of canals and small channels, from which water is raised by the Persian wheel, and by other modes. Since its annexation to the British territory, it has been held by a military force of 10,500 men, in which are two European regiments, and a detachment of artillery.

Peters or Petras, a comm. & town of France, dep. Haute-Saône, cap. cant., arrond. and 10 m. S. Gray. Pop. 1,500. It has iron works.

Pesth, a royal free city of Hungary, on l. b. of the Danube, immediately opposite Buda, with which it is connected by a bridge of boats and by a suspension bridge, 130 m. E.S.E. Vienna. Pop., exclusive of garrison (1864), 106,570. It is situated on level ground, is about 7 m. in circumference, and regularly laid out. Principal edifices, the theatre, national casino, ex. hall, New-probance, a vast structure, used as an artillery depot, grenadier barracks, Jesuit, and several other convents, Roman Catholic, Greek, Lutheran, Calvinist, and other churches, Jews' synagogues, and hospitals. The ancient structures of the Hungarian cap. are all in Buda, and Pesth is the "new city." The university, the only one in Hungary, has 49 professors, and a library of 80,000 vols. In 1846, it was attended by 1,000 students. The observatory is situated on the Blochsberg in Buda. Here are also a botanic garden, veterinary hospital, a national museum, with a library rich in Hungarian MSS. and valuable collections of coins, minerals, fossils, and antiquities, a Hungarian academy of sciences, Roman Catholic, Lutheran, and nautical schools, an English conventual, and various charitable institutions. Pesth has some silk, woollen, leather, oil, and tobacco factories, and dye-works, but its principal manuf. is that of meerschaum pipe bowls, brought to it in a rough state from Constantinople. Immediately around the city is the Rakosfeld, a wide plain, on which the Hungarian diets were held for many centuries. Pesth is supposed to occupy the site of the ancient Transacium. The old town was enclosed by walls in the 13th century. It was held by the Turks for 160 years. Buda and Pesth suffered severely from an inundation of the river in March 1876. Pesth is a station for steam-packets, and is connected by railway with Szolnok, 66 m. E.S.E., and with Waitzen, 22 m. N. ward. [BUDA.]

Pop. 643,700. Surface mostly level, soil thin, climate damp and cold, and 2-3ds of the gov. are covered with woods and marishes. Principal rivers, the Pina and Luga, flowing to the Gulf of Finland, the Volkhov, Sesi, Svir, entering the Lake Ladoga, and the Neva, uniting the lake and gulf, and on which is the cap. city. Rye, barley, oats, and some wheat, hemp and flax, are cultivated, but the climate is unfavourable for corn, and the quantity produced is far below the consumption. Around the cap. are many market gardens, kept by German colonists. Timber deals and masts form chief articles of export. Some building stone and lime are obtained, and in the cap. all kinds of manufactures are carried on. Pop. mostly Russians, but comprises many foreigners, most of whom are Lutherans. The gov. is divided into 9 circles, or dists. After St Petersburg, the chief towns are Schluesselburg, Luga, Jamburg, Croonstadt, and Zarskoe-Selo.

PETERSBURG (Sr), the modern cap. city of the Russian empire, cap. gov.; founded by Peter the Great in 1703, on both sides of the Neva, at its influx into the Gulf of Finland, 18 m. E. Croonstadt. Lat. of observatory 59° 56' 5" N., lon. 30° 19' 0" E. Pop. (1840) 479,202; do. (1852) 692,341. Mean temperature of year 39° F., winter 18° F., summer 61° F., Fabr. It stands chiefly on the S. bank of the Neva, and partly on islands formed by the divergence of the river, which is crossed by 3 swing bridges, the chief of which is the Isaac's bridge, and over its branches and canals there are upwards of 70 bridges; 9 of its 12 quarters are on the mainland. Being situated on a flat and marshy soil, it is difficult of drainage, and subject to destructive inundations. Great part of the houses are constructed of wood, but the public buildings are massive and elegant. Its principal thoroughfares and large squares are wide and spacious. The principal channel of the Neva is bordered by granite quays, and on the side of the mainland are the cathedral of St Isaac, the admiralty, the hermitage, a palace, long the residence of Catherine II., and which comprises the court, theatre, a picture gallery, valuable library, and a rich museum. In the same quarter are the marble palace, clay hall, senate, and ministerial offices, bank, post-office, grand bazaar, hotel de Peter major, and the cathedral of our Lady of Kasan, built on the model of St Peter's at Rome. Close to the quay is the bronze equestrian statue of Peter the Great, on a block of granite, opposite which is a long bridge leading to an island on which is the exchange. The citadel, on a small island in the Neva, contains the mint, and the cathedral of St Peter and St Paul, in which are the tombs of the Russian sovereigns. On an adjacent island is the house in which Peter the Great lived while constructing the original town. Other chief structures are the Aufschkoff and Taurida palaces, the hotel of the academy of arts, barracks, arsenal, cannon foundry, Mikhailov palace, the convent of Smolnot, hospitals, and the column erected to the emperor Alexander, a granite monolith, 84 feet in height. The S. part of the city is intersected by the Fontanka and other canals, lined by quays. The bridges across the Neva, and its principal branches, are erected on boats, and annually removed before the river is frozen, for it is open for navigation only 219 days in the year (May to November). The inundations of the Neva often cause great disasters; in that of 1824, 15,000 lives were lost. The university founded in 1819, had, in 1851, 68 professors and 369 students. A medical chirological academy of high reputation, military and geological schools, an oriental institution, school of commerce and navigation, two colleges, high and other schools for both sexes, an imperial library, with 420,000 volumes, & 7,000 MSS., an academy of sciences, having valuable museums, an astronomical and a meteorological observatory, the imperial academy, a Kalmuck institution, a geographical society, a botanic garden, and associations and public institutions of all descriptions. Manus. of all kinds are carried on, and it has imperial gunpowder, tapestry, and porcelain factories, a cannon foundry, and near the city the glassworks of Ojersk. It receives merchandise from all parts of the Russian empire and Central Asia, by means of navigable rivers and canals, and one of its most characteristic features is the winter market, in which are seen enormous pyramids composed of the carcases of cattle, sheep, and swine, fish, fowls, eggs, and butter frozen into solid masses. Chief exports, tallow, flax, hemp, iron, copper, corn, timber, potash, canvass, and coarse linens, oils, furs, hides, and tar; imports colonial produce, cotton and woollen goods, dye stuffs, wines, silks, woollens, hardwares, salt, tin, lead, coal, linens, etc. In ordinary times it has regular steam-packet communication with all the principal ports of Europe. The channel at the mouth of the river is impeded by sand, narrow and difficult of access. The low islands of the Neva are strongly fortified.

 and for 5 m. along the Delaware, 100 m. from its junction with the Atlantic, and immediately opposite Camden in New Jersey, 28 m. S.W. Trenton, and 80 m. S.W. New York, with both which cities it communicates by railways, as also with Columbia on the Susquehanna, Baltimore, Reading, and Norristown, and by branches with all the great railways of this part of the Union. Lat.
 39° 57' N., lon. 75° 10' W. Mean annual temp.
 50° S., winter 30° F., summer 71° F., Fahr. Pop. (1800)
 70,287; (1850) with adjacent municipalities, Northern Liberties, Kensington, Spring Garden, Southward, and Moyamensing, 409,553. City proper regularly laid out, is drained into the Delaware,
 and well supplied with water from extensive works
 on the Schuylkill, here crossed by wooden bridges, one of which forms a viaduct for the railway to Baltimore. Many of the streets are shaded with trees, and the public buildings are mostly of white marble. The principal are the U. S. bank, after the model of the Parthenon at Athens; the U. S. mint, the exchange, and post-office, the U. S. naval asylum, with Ionic portico, and 180 dormitories; the Gerard bank, Gerard college for orphans, founded with a bequest of 2,000,000 dollars; the almshouses, with 180 ac. of ground;
 masonic hall, state penitentiary; state prison, and the state house, in which the Independence of the Union was declared in 1776.
 There are upwards of 100 places of worship, and 9
 Jews' synagogues. The chief charitable institutions are the Pennsylvania hospital, possessing a good anatomical museum, a full length statue of Penn. and West's painting of "Christ healing
 the sick;" Willis' hospital, and deaf-mute, blind, and Magdalen asylums. The university of Pennsylvania, incorporated in its present form in 1791,
 has a flourishing medical school with (in 1846) 404 students; Jefferson medical college, and the Pennsylvania college, are also important medical schools. The American philosophical society, founded by Benjamin Franklin and others in 1740, academy of natural sciences, etc., etc., historical and other societies, the Friends' national schools, and the library company, all possess good libraries. The Philadelphia museum is reputed to be the best in the Union, and the city has five theatres, and numerous public gardens. Manufactures are in great variety. The Delaware, here 1 m. across, is navigable to the city for the largest ships. In 1851, 576 ships entered the port, with cargoes valued at 13,000,000 dollars, and in the fiscal period 1849-50, 479 cleared out. Independent of this, the coasting and river trade is highly important. In 1851, 26,484 vessels arrived coastwise at Philadelphia. Burden of shipping belonging to port 222,428 tons. Large quantities of provisions are brought hither from the interior, and the city is the great depot for coal in the Union, 8,126 vessels laden with which arrived at Port Richmond in 1851. The city, independent of its suburbs, is governed by a mayor, 12 select councillors, and a common council of 20 members. It was founded in 1682 by W. Penn, whose residence, Pennsburg manor, was near the city.—II. a township, New York, 16 m. N.E. Watertown. Pop. 1,916.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (Span. Islas Filipinas), a large and important group in the Asiatic Archipelago, forming its N. division, and next to Cuba the most valuable colonial possession of Spain, chiefly between lat. 5° 33' and 19° 38' N., lon. 117° and 127° E., having N. and E. the Pacific Ocean, W. the China Sea, and S. the Seas of Sooloo and Celebes. There are 408 inhabited islands. Principal islands, Luzon, Mindanao, and Palawan, with Mindoro, Panay, Marinduque, Negros, Zebu, Bohol, Leyte, Samar, Masbate, and many of less size. Total area estimated at 260,000 (?) sq. m., but the Spanish dominion extends over only 52,148 sq. m. P. (1860) 3,815,878, those under Spanish rule (1849) 3,698,730, consisting of Papuan Negroes and independent tribes, Malay Indians, half-castes, and Chinese, Europeans and native whites. The islands are of volcanic formation, and contain a chain of active volcanoes. Earthquakes also are of frequent occurrence. The group is within the range of the monsoons, and violent hurricanes are common. From May to September the W. coasts are deluged with rain, while the October monsoon brings rain to the E. coast, at other seasons dry. The high temperature and abundance of moisture produce a luxuriant vegetation, so that they are capable of yielding all kinds of colonial, and probably European produce. Rice, millet, maize, sugar, indigo, hemp, tobacco, coffee, and cotton, are raised; and sago, coconuts, bananas, cinnamon, betel, numerous fine fruits, and timber for ship-building, are among the products. Buffaloes, and most of the domestic animals common in Europe, are reared. There are no predaceous quadrupeds; the cayman is found in the rivers. Pearls, pearl oyster shell, the sea slug, edible birds' nests, and sapan wood, are important articles of export hence to China. Domestic weaving is pretty generally carried on by the females, and straw hats, cigar cases, and earthenware are made; but the chief manufacture is that of "government Manila" cigars, which occupies 2,000 persons at a royal factory in Manila. The colonial policy of Old Spain excluded all foreign ships and Chinese settlers from these islands, and the trade with the Spanish dominions in America was also confined to that conducted annually by a single ship! But such restrictions have vanished since the revolution, and the colony is now making commensurate progress towards prosperity. In 1842, 149 ships, aggregate burden 44,869 tons, entered, and 169 do., burden 50,226 tons, cleared at the different ports. Imports amounted in value to $90,680, one-third from England, and more than another third from China, the U. S., and British India. Exports amounted in value to $74,160, chiefly sent to England, Spain, the U. S., China, and Australia. Manila is the principal seat of the trade, and also the seat of the government, it being the residence of the captain-general. In each of the larger islands is a lieutenant-governor; and each of the 30 provs., governed by an alcalde, is divided into pueblos or communes. The Roman Catholic religion has been extensively diffused among the Malay population. Public revenue is derived chiefly from duties on exports and imports, the tobacco monopoly, and a capitation tax, which, in 1837, was paid by 1,305,142 adults, of whom 901,924 belonged to the island Luzon. Armed force amounts to about 7,000 men. 1-10th Spaniards, and the rest Malays. These isls. were discovered by Magalhaens in 1521, and settled by the Spaniards in the reign of Philip II., after whom they were named.

PIDMONT (PATRICIPALITY OF), Ital. Piemonte, N. Italy, the metropolitan and central portion of the kingdom of Sardinia, of which it now forms the divisions Turin, Coni (Cuneo), Alessandria, Aosta, and Novara. [SARDINIA.] On the N.W. and S. the region is enclosed by the Alps and the Apennines, and consists of the upper valley of the Po, by which river and its affluents the Tanaro, Bormida, Cisaone, Dora, Sesia, etc., it is wholly drained. Its E. part forms a portion of the great plain of Lombardy, is carefully irrigated, and of high fertility; much of it is in pasturage, and large herds of cattle are reared, as in the adjacent Milanese territory. A surplus of corn over home consumption is produced, and supplies the territory bordering on the Mediterranean as far as Toulon. Wheat, maize, barley, rice, hemp, and fruits, are principal crops; wines are of inferior quality, and oil is produced only in small quantities; the silk is amongst the best in Italy. Mineral products comprise iron, lead, copper, marble, sulphur, manganese, cobalt, and small quantities of the precious metals. Principal manufactures are silk fabrics and organzine, hosiery, woollen and linen goods, brandy and liqueurs, glass, and iron wares. The inhabitants are nearly all Roman Catholics, except about 22,000 Waldensian Protestants in the Alpine valleys, who have now freedom of worship. After Turin, the cap. of the Sardinian dom., the chief cities are Alessandria, Asti, Coni, Novara, Vercelli, Pinerolo, Susa, Varallo, and Aosta. The great routes of the Simplon, Mont Cenis, St Bernard, and the Col de Tende, cross the Alps into Piedmont.

PITCALIAN ISLAND, a solitary island in the Pacific Ocean, lat. 25° 3' 6" S., lon. 130° 8' 00" W., about 7 m. in circumference, elevated in the centre, with a peak at each extremity, greatest height 1,040 feet; of volcanic origin. Soil fertile but porous, and rather defective in water; well wooded, and climate healthful; thermometer ranging from 59° to 89° Fahr. Prevailing winds S.W. and E.S.E. It is surrounded by rocky shores, and has only one accessible landing place at Bounty Bay. The cocoa nut, plantain, and banana trees flourish; the bread-fruit tree is on the decay; hibiscus or cloth tree, banyan tree, orange, and others; and the potato, sweet potato, yams, water melons, pumpkin, taro, sugar cane, ginger, turmeric, tobacco, tea-plant, and maize are cultivated. The island contained no indigenous quadrupeds, but goats, swine, and poultry have been imported. In 1780, this island was resorted to by the mutineers of the "Bounty," consisting of 9 British sailors, 6 native Tahitian men, and 18 women. In consequence of disorders & massacres, at the end of 10 years, there remained only one Englishman, Adams, the Tahitian females, and 19 children, their offspring. Under the superintendence of this man the children were educated and trained up to habits of industry and morality. In 1833, Captain Beechey found a most interesting and intelligent colony of 66 persons. In 1831, with the sanction of the British government, the colony, numbering 87 persons, was transferred to Tahiti. After remaining 6 months there, and losing 12 of their number by death, they, at their own solicitation, were again reinstated in their native island. In 1851 the pop. amounted to 180, 81 males, and 79 females, inhabiting 17 houses. Chief diseases, rheumatism, asthma, ague, and bilious attacks. Small-pox is unknown. Annually a chief magistrate and assistant are elected by the votes of the community. They have a church, schools, and comfortable cottages, forming a village. The average number of ships which annually visit the island has been for some years about 10, chiefly American whalers, to whom provisions are supplied, in exchange for clothing, etc. The islanders speak and read the English language, are of an active, robust frame of body, dark complexion, with pleasing countenances, and hospitable and engaging dispositions. From the remains of burial grounds, the island would appear to have been occupied by inhabitants at a period antecedent to the visit of the mutineers of the "Bonny." It was seen by Carteret in 1767, and named by him after one of his officers. The whole population, 198 in number, removed to Norfolk Island in July 1856.

Except a portion of the Pampea, which is watered by the Rio Negro, Colorado, and Desaguadero rivers, nearly all the country belongs to the basin of the Plata river, the great estuary of which is between this territory and Uruguay. The depts. Mendoza, La Rioja, Catamarca, and Salta, along its W. and N. frontier, are mountainous, and some elevated ranges are scattered over Cordova, and some parts of the country E. of the Paraná; but the rest of this region consists chiefly of two immense plains,—the N., watered by the Salado, Vermejo, Pilcomayo, etc., forming part of the Gran Chaco, which extends into the E. half of Bolivia; and the S. or Pampea, a plain covered alternately with luxuriant pasturage, vast crops of gigantic thistles, and interspersed with a multitude of salt lakes, some of large size. By far the most important product is cattle. Millions of oxen wander at large across the plains, or are reared on breeding estates of vast extent. Horses are also in immense herds, and mules are bred for sale to Peruvian and other traders. The breeds of sheep and swine are of inferior quality. The guanaco, llama, and vicuña, abound in the vicinity of the Andes; and the native animals comprise the puma, jaguar, and armadillo; the bisoacha, the burrowing of which render excursions in the Pampas sometimes dangerous; and the small quadrupeds which furnish the nutria and chinchilla skins. North of Corrientes, cotton, tobacco, rice, the sugar-cane, and indigo are raised; maize, wheat, and other grains, are principal articles of culture in the S., and wheat has lately become an article of export. Other products are cochineal, cocoa, madder, cinchona bark, Paraguay tea, and various fruits; of the last, some introduced by Europeans have been found to flourish satisfactorily. In the dep. La Rioja, from 5,000 to 10,000 small barrels of strong wine are made annually, and sent into Cordova and the neighbouring depts.; and full-bodied wine and brandy is furnished to Buenos Ayres from the dep. Mendoza. All agricultural processes, however, are in the most backward condition. Salt effloresces in large quantities on the surface of the plains, and here are sometimes of rock-salt. Coal is reported to be plentiful in the S.W., and sulphur, alum, mineral pitch, etc., in the vicinity of the Andes; but few, if any, mines are wrought. The Indians of the Chaco manufacture yarn, ropes, fishing-nets, and other articles from the fibres of the aloe, with saddle-cloths, blankets, and other fabrics which they dye with great skill, and sell to their more civilized neighbours; and in Cordova similar goods, morocco leather and turned wares are manufactured, but in general manufactured goods are imported from abroad in return for raw produce. In 1852, the rivers Paraná and Uruguay were opened to ships of every nation. The products or manufactures of the Thirteen Confederate Provinces, shall be free of all duties from one province to another. In the same year 63 ships, aggregate burden 18,325 tons entered, and 58 do., burden 18,092 tons, cleared the port. Government is nominally republican, and the legislative power in theory vested in a junta of 44 deputies, half annually renewed by popular election, and in a senate of 2 deputies from each department. Public revenue in 1850, amounted to 62,286,510 dollars. Expenditure 56,046,351 do. National debt 18,283,244 do. The country was discovered in 1517, and settled in 1553 by the Spaniards, under whom it was created into a vice-royalty. The English made an unsuccessful attempt on it in 1807. Its independence of Spain dates from 1816. In 1835, de Rosas, a successful soldier against the Indians, was elected dictator of Buenos Ayres, which he exercised with almost absolute rule, till he was defeated by Urquiza, the governor of Entre Rio, when Rosas fled to England.

PLATA (RIO DE LA) or the PLATE RIVER, one of the great rivers, or rather a great estuary of South America, Plata Confederation, formed by the junction of the Paraná and Uruguay rivers, in lat. 34° S., lon. 58° 30' W., its basin lying S. of those of the Amazon, Tocantins, and San Francisco, and its numerous tributaries draining most part of the Plata, Paraguay, and Uruguay territories, with considerable portions of Bolivia and Brazil. The estuary resulting from their union is 200 m. in length N.W. to S.E., and where it joins the Atlantic Ocean, is 170 m. across (between Maldonado and Cape St. Antonia); its centre being about lat. 35° 30' S., lon. 56° W. Its muddy waters can be traced in the ocean 200 m. from its mouth. The total length of the Plata and the Paraguay has been estimated at nearly 2,500 m.; and from the ocean to the island Appe in the Paraná, at least 1,260 m., there is a continuous and safe navigation for vessels of 300 tons. The Aguapey, an affluent of the Paraguay near lat. 15° 40' S., lon. 58° 30' W., is separated only by a portage of 8 m. from the Alegre, a tributary of the Guapore, and were a canal to be made to connect the two streams, a complete system of internal navigation throughout nearly all South America would be secured.

PLYMOUTH, a parl. and munic. bor., seaport town and naval station in England, co. Devon, hundred Roborough, on the E. side of a peninsula, between the Rivers Plym and Tamar, at the head of Plymouth Sound, 37 m. S.W. Exeter, communicates by railway with that city. Lat. of Mount Wise $50^{\circ} 22' N.$, lon. $4^{\circ} 10' 2' W.$ With the adjacent town Devonport, the bor. has a united area of 2,300 ac. Pop. 102,380. The town of Plymouth stands on uneven ground, and is irregularly laid out. Between it and the Sound is the Hoe, a fine open space, surmounting a cliff, and on which is the citadel, a bastioned fortress, containing a governor's residence, and extensive barracks. Principal edifices in the town are the royal hotel, & theatre, Athenaeum, public library, royal union baths, Freemasons' hall, exchange, market place, guildhall, with the gaol, several hospitals, and barracks. St Andrew's church is large, and has a square embattled tower, and here are three other parish churches. The structures connected with the naval establishments are outside of the town. The dockyard (it has nine docks, and the one last formed is the largest in Europe) is at Devonport (which see), and is in most respects similar to that of Portsmouth, with the advantage of its various buildings being more substantially constructed of stone, and its docks and roofings of the most solid character; it has, however, a less extent than that of Portsmouth. In it is an observatory. The naval and royal military hospitals at Stonehouse, the victualling office at Devil's (or Duval's) Point, the gun wharf, and the military prison, are all stone edifices. Plymouth harbour is double, consisting of the Hamoaze or mouth of the Tamar opposite Devonport, adapted for the largest ships of war; and the Catwater, or estuary of the Plym, immediately E. Plymouth, and on which are the villas, Oreston, Hoo, Turnhapel, with various wet and dry docks, now chiefly appropriated to merchant-shipping. Plymouth has a trade with London, Bristol, Newcastle, and Newport. It imports West Indian colonial produce, and timber from North America, and it has manufactures of sail-cloth, refined sugar, glass, soap, and starch, a large distillery, and extensive pichard and other fisheries. Registered shipping of port 394 vessels, aggregate burden 34,808 tons. Its institutions comprises a grammar and other schools, the natural history society of Devon and Cornwall, public, medical, law, and theological libraries, and a mechanics' institute, and charities to about 3,000 a year. It has a branch of the bank of England, and several other banks. It sends 2 members to House of Commons. Among its distinguished natives was the famous Sir F. Drake, and also Dr John Kitchin, the eminent Biblical scholar. Plymouth Sound is an inlet of the English Channel, between the cos. of Devon and Cornwall. Length 3 m., breadth 4 m. At its N.E. and N.W. extremities the Plym and Tamar rivers enter it, forming respectively the harbours opposite Plymouth and Devonport. On its E. side is Brixand Bay, and on its W. are Cawsand Bay and Mount Edgecumbe. Shores abrupt. It contains several islands, the principal being Mount Batten, with a fortification immediately opposite the Hoe of Plymouth. The Sound has been formed into an excellent naval harbour by the Plymouth Breakwater, a granite and marble structure built across its entrance, 1,700 yards in length, 16 do. in width at top, with a lighthouse on its W. extremity, and a beacon on its E.

PLYMOUTH, a seaport town, U. S., North America, Massachusetts, cap. co., on Cape Cod Bay, 36 m. S.S.E. Boston. Pop. 6,025. PO (Padus and Eridanus), the largest river of Italy, in its N. portion, irrigating, with its affs., the entire plain of Piedmont and Lombardy, rises in Monte Viso, lat. $44^{\circ} 38' N.$, lon. $7^{\circ} 10' E.$, flows at first N.E. to Turin, where it makes a curve E.S.E. for about 45 m., then turns N. to receive the waters of the Oglio, and thence flows mostly Eward with a very tortuous course to the Adriatic, which it enters by several mouths between lat. $44^{\circ} 48'$ and $45^{\circ} 1' N.$, the principal surmised the Po della Maestra, della Tolia, di Goro, and di Volano. Total estimated length 340 m., of which about 280 m. are navigable for large barges and river steamers. Principal affs. on left, the Cusone, Sesia, Ticino, Olona, Adda, Oglio, and Minio; and on right, the Maira, Tanaro, Trebbia, Taro, Parma, Secchia, and Panaro. The Po, in many parts of Lombardy, above the neighbouring plains; below Piacenza it is enclosed by embankments formed by its own deposits, and carefully kept up to prevent inundations from floods. Its ordinary width averages 1,900 feet; its depth varies, according to the season, from 18 to 36 feet. Its current in the dry season is sluggish, but in spring and summer rapid and turbulent. Its rapid stream, numerous islands, and the many sand banks in its lower part greatly impede navigation; but it is highly useful in fertilizing the country, and it abounds with sturgeons, salmon, and other fish.

Surface a vast plain, with a mean elevation of 310 to 500 feet above the Baltic, except in the S., where offsets of the Carpathian mountains rise to 1,000 feet. It is well watered, and covered with extensive forests. Chief rivers, the Narew, Niemen, Vistula, Bug, and Warta. There are many small lakes and marshes in the N.E. dists. Climate extreme. Summer very hot, mean temperature 90°, winter excessively cold, temperature 10° below zero. The soil is snow-clad and frozen for five months in the year. Soil sandy loam, resting mostly on granite; generally fertile. Agriculture has recently been much improved, and corn is exported. The chief crop for home consumption is rye. Buck-wheat, barley, and oats, are also cultivated. The grain called Danzig white wheat is grown in the S. provs. Building-timber, hemp, flax, and tobacco, are important products. The cattle and sheep are of inferior breeds. Chief mineral products, bog iron, copper, lead, zinc, and coal. The celebrated salt mines of ancient Poland are in Galicia. Nearly all the commerce is in the hands of the Jews. The Christians number 4,287,216; Jews 568,970; Mussulmans 291; and Bohemians 182. In the 15th century Poland extended from Russia in the E., to Germany on the W., and from the Baltic on the N. to Turkey on the S. Its area was larger than that of France, and its pop. is supposed to have amounted to 15,000,000. It was then divided into Great Poland, Little Poland, and Lithuania, which was incorporated with it in 1386. At the dismemberment of Poland in 1773, the three neighbouring powers, Russia, Prussia, and Austria, appropriated nearly one-third of the territory. Russia and Prussia, on the second partition in 1793, seized about half of the remaining portion, and the third partition in 1795, put an end to the republic. The last king of Poland, Stanislaus Augustus, died at St Petersburg in 1795. In 1807, Napoleon I. united a great part of anc. Poland under the name of the Grand duchy of Warsaw; this continued till 1815, when the kingdom of Poland was formed of the greater part of the former grand duchy. This state, of which the emperor of Russia was king, had a constitution, a separate army, and the use of the national language. It lasted till 1830, when a revolution took place, which terminated in 1831 by the surrender of Warsaw to the Russians, and the dispersion of the Poles. In 1832, Poland was declared an integral part of the Russian empire. A fresh attempt to restore its independence was made at Cracow in 1846, which ended in the subjugation of this last remnant of ancient Poland, and its annexation to Austria. [GALICIA—POSEN.]

POŁANÓW, a frontier town of Russia, gov. Courland, on the Baltic, 42 m. W. Telsh, with a custom-house. Pop. 1,500, mostly Jews. In 1831, the Poles were here defeated by the Russians.

POLAR REGIONS, the zones surrounding the North and South Poles, within the Arctic and Antarctic circles. The North Polar Regions comprise the N. portion of Scandinavia in Europe, the N. portion of Siberia in Asia, the N. coast of North America, Baffin Bay, the greater part of Greenland, the islands of Spitzbergen, and the Parry Islands in the North Polar Sea. Within this region the temperature is, at Yakutsk in Siberia, Jan. minus 45°, July 68°. 8, Melville Island, Jan. minus 41°, July 42°. The first attempt to discover a N.W. Passage through the Polar Sea was made by Cortereal, a Portuguese, about A.D. 1500. Willoughby sailed from the Thames in 1538. From that time till 1840, about 27 different sea and land expeditions were undertaken by British navigators, without success. In 1847, Captain Parry attained lat. 83° 40' N., lon. 19° 25' E., in boats. On 24th May 1845, Sir John Franklin and Captain Crozier left England in the "Erebus" and "Terror"; they were last seen on 26th July 1845, in lat. 74° 48' N., lon. 86° 13' W. Searching expeditions were sent out in 1848; but the first traces of the missing vessels were found at Cape Riley, in Barrow Strait, August 1850, in which year also Captain McClure solved the question of a N.W. passage, having coasted the N. shore of America from Behring Strait on the W. to the entrance of Melville Strait on the E. In 1854, remains of several seamen, with cooking utensils and other relics belonging to Franklin's expedition, were discovered on King William Land, W. of the isthmus of Boothia, but the ships were not found. The South Polar Regions were penetrated by Cook to lat. 67° 30' S., lon. 89° E., and to lat. 71° 10' S., lon. 110° W.; and in 1841 Sir James Ross discovered Victoria Land, with the active volcano of Erebus, 12,000 feet above the frozen surface of the ocean, in lat. 78° S., lon. 176° E., within 18° of the South Pole.

POLYNESIA ("many islands") includes the multitude of islands scattered over the Pacific Ocean, and comprehends a belt chiefly within 30° on each side of the equator, and from lon. 150° E. to 135° W. Including New Zealand, the boundary extends S. of the equator to lat. 47° S. The islands are distributed into numerous groups, and these groups, of an elongated form, have a general direction from N.W. to S.E., and are composed of one or more larger islands, and numerous smaller ones. The principal groups to the N. of the equator, are the Pelew, Ladrone or Mariana, Caroline, Radeck, Marshall, Gilbert, and Sandwich Islands. S. of the equator are New Ireland, New Hebrides, New Britain, Feejee, Friendly, Navigator, Solomon, Society, Mendana or Marquesas, Low Archipelago, Cook, Austral, and other minor groups, besides numerous detached islands, as Easter and Pitcairn Islands. With the exception of Hawaii, the largest isl. of Polynesia, the most considerable of the others range from 20 to 80 and 100 m. in circumference, while many do not exceed a mile or two in length. These isls. are all, more or less, of coral formation; the low Archipelago, Society isls., Marshall, and Carolines presenting the regular atoll form, with circular reefs and lagoons. The Friendly, New Hebrides, Solomon, and Sandwich Islands present fringed reefs, and have active volcanoes; summits of mtns. varying from 2,000 to 13,000 feet. In the lower coral isls. the elevations do not exceed 500 feet. In the atoll coral isls. Darwin supposes that a depression of surface is taking place, and that the volcanic isls. are either stationary or rising. From the great predominance of ocean, the temperature of Polynesia is comparatively moderate, the climate delightful, and salubrious. Mean annual temp. of Sandwich Isls. 77°, temperature of Society Isls. 70° to 80°, and rarely 90°, Fahr. The S.E. tropical wind generally prevails, but N.W. and S.W. winds are not uncommon. Thunder storms and water spouts are frequent. Hurricanes are rare, earthquakes slight and not of frequent occurrence. The refreshing coolness of the trade winds, and a regular but not excessive supply of moisture are favourable to a luxuriant vegetation. Soil in the valleys and in the river courses, a rich volcanic mould; on the mountains less fertile. Both vegetable and animal productions are limited as to number of species. In the islands of the middle and eastern divisions not more than 500 species of plants are found. This number increases towards the W. and N.W. The bread fruit, peculiar to this region, the cocoa, banana, plantain, banyan, sugar-cane, yam, and cotton-plant, paper mulberry, and a species of chestnut, are indigenous. Other trees and plants of tropical climates have been introduced and flourish; and arrow-root, sweet potatoes, the common potato, and maize, are now reared abundantly. There are several timber trees, especially sandal-wood, a few spices, and ornamental flower-, which, however, have little odour or decided colour. The islands were all remarkably deficient in animals, thus indicating their isolated and comparatively recent origin. Swine, dogs, and rats were the only quadrupeds; snakes, or other reptiles are confined to Navigator group; vampire bats are found in some of the islands. Land birds are not numerous, owls, parrots, pigeons, and some ploverines forming the most remarkable; wild ducks, and other water fowls are more plentiful. Turtles resort in great numbers to many localities, and fish are plentiful on the coasts. Several species of whales, the cachalot or sperm whale, Cape whale, hump back, and black fish, are peculiar to the seas of the Pacific, and their capture has been the chief inducement for ships visiting these regions. Oxen have been introduced from New South Wales, and thrive well; and horses from Central America. The natives of Polynesia are in general a well-formed, tall, active, and intelligent people. There are two distinct races, one apparently of Malay origin, by far the most numerous and intellectual, and spread over all central and eastern Polynesia, and speaking one common language, though varying in dialects. The other a negro or Papuan race, with negro features and colour, and crisped mop-like hair, growing in separate tufts, speaking a distinct language, and exhibiting an intellect of an inferior grade, probably the first settlers of the islands, and now confined to the W. part of Polynesia, and inhabiting partly or wholly New Guinea, New Britain, New Ireland, the Solomon islands, New Caledonia, New Hebrides, and part of the Ladrone islands. In some of the isls. there is a partial intermixture of the two races, and in others an apparent Caucasian intermixture, indicated by the ample beard and prominence of the features. Some of the western isls., as the Ladrone, were discovered by Magalhães in 1521, the Marquesas by Mendana in 1595, but it was not till 1767, that Wallis, and subsequently Cook, explored and described the leading islands of this region. Soon after this, missionaries began to settle in the islands, and after many discouragements at last have succeeded in promoting Christianity and civilization in some of the principal islands; though cannibalism and savage ferocity still prevail in the majority. In 1844, there were 45 British and American missionary stations in Polynesia, the principal being in the Sandwich Islands, Tahiti and Society Isls., Friendly Islands, Feejee Islands, New Hebrides, and Hervey Islands. The pop. of these islands varies continually from wars, migrations, and occasional pestilence. Tahiti and some others, when first discovered, were conjectured to be greatly more populous than at present, but no proper data exist for affording even an approximation to the real number. Probably the population of the whole of Polynesia does not exceed 1,000,000, or 1,500,000. [For further information, see the individual groups and islands.]

The territory S. of the principal chain of the Apennines is watered by the Tiber and its affluents the Chana, Tevere, Nera, and Teverone, which flow S.W. to the Mediterranean. N. of the Apennines, it is watered by the Lamone, Savio, Marecchia, Metauro, Esino, Musone, Fozzena, Chienti, and Tronto, small torrents from the Apennines; and the N. frontier is traversed by the chief branch of the Po—all tributaries to the Adriatic. The principal lakes are those of Perugia, Bolsena, Albano, and Bracciano; and the marshes of Comacchio, and Pontine marshes. The territory is traversed longitudinally by the chain of the Apennines, of which the highest point, within its limits, is Monte Velino, 8,210 feet. In the N., it comprises part of the great plain of the Po, and in the S.W. the undulating plain called the Campagna di Roma, terminating in the Pontine marshes, noted for insalubrity. The climate varies greatly in different quarters. In the legations, situated on the N. of the Apennines opposite the snow-clad Alps, the winter is severe, while in the S. the climate is very mild, except in the mountain districts; and the region of the Campagna di Rome would be a blooming garden, but for the fatal effects of the miasma, which forces the cultivators of the soil to seek refuge at night in the few scattered towns near its borders. The mean temperature of the year at Rome is 60° 4, Fahr., warmest month 76°; coldest month 45°, Fahr. The soil is generally fertile, but neglected; it is calculated that only one-third of the superficies is under cultivation; much of the surface affords excellent pasturage, which is occupied by great herds of buffaloes. Considerable flocks of sheep and many horses are reared; great numbers of swine roam in the forests of the Apennines. Agriculture is backward. The chief crops are wheat, maize, pulse, hemp, wine, oil, and tobacco; oats, barley, and rye are grown in the N. legations; in the extreme S. sugar, indigo, and cotton are cultivated to a small extent, and cork trees are numerous. The wines are of inferior quality. Chestnuts form a considerable article of food. There are in the states mines of iron, lead, sulphur, alum, vitriol, and other volcanic products, but they are all nearly unproductive, except the sulphur mines near Rimini. Salt is made in the lagoons of Ostia, Comacchio, and Cervia, to the amount of more than 84,000,000 lbs. annually. The fisheries are mostly conducted by the inhabitants of the kingdom of Naples. Manufacturing industry is confined to the large cities and for home consumption; it comprises silks, leather, gloves, paper, musical strings, iron and glass wares, a few cotton goods at Rome, crapes and saunges at Bologna, cordage, soap, cream of tartar, and glass. Commerce limited, and conducted chiefly with the Mediterranean states. In the Pontifical States there were, in 1844, 9 archbishops, 62 bishops, 13 abbeys, 1,324 monasteries, and 612 convents. Secular clergy were estimated at 35,000, monks 10,000, and nuns 8,000. Education is conducted in universities, colleges, seminaries, and elementary schools. The seats of the seven universities are Bologna, the most ancient and celebrated in Italy, Rome, Perugia, Ferrara, Cambrino, Urbino, and Macerata, the last four founded in 1824; in 1841 these were attended in all by 2,400 students. The proportion of students in the state schools was only 1 in 50. No general provision is made for the education of the lower orders, and the instruction imparted is very inferior in quality. The government is an absolute elective monarchy; the Pope chosen by the college of cardinals from their own body, is at the same time the head of the universal Romish church, and a temporal sovereign. Previous to the 7th century, the popes were only bishops of Rome; the basis of their temporal power was laid by the successive donations of Pepin, Charlemagne, and the emperor Henry III., but was consolidated only in the 16th century. At the French revolution of 1790, the popes lost their possession of Arignon and Venetian, and in 1797 their domain was further diminished by the legations ceded to the Cisalpine republic. In 1808 Napoleon I. divided the other states between the kingdom of Italy and the French empire, but

In 1814 all these territories were restored to the Pope, except Avignon. In 1847, Pope Pius ix. established a constitutional parliament, consisting of 98 deputies popularly elected, but the revolution of 1848, which commenced by the assassination of Count Rossi, overturned these arrangements. The pope fled from Rome, but has since returned. The papal forces are governed by a board, whose head is a prelate. In 1859 12 m. of railway were opened, and others in progress. Revenue (1858) 14,062,068 scudi. Expenditure, 14,320,022 scudi. Army (1858) 15,225 men; 1,350 horses. The French corps of occupation at Rome is reduced to one division. The Austrians occupy Bologna and Ancona. The interest of the public debt absorbed 98 per cent. of the income.

PONTINE MARSHES, Paludi Pontine, a vast marshy tract of Italy, in the S. portion of the Campagna di Roma, extending along the coasts of the Mediterranean, from Cisterna on the N., to Terracina on the S., a distance of 25 m. It is traversed by the road from Rome to Naples. From the time of the Roman republic, great efforts have been made to drain this tract, but its drainage is not yet completed. The region is highly fertile, but extremely pestilential.

PORTSWAMP, a pa. of England, co. Sussex, 4 m. W.N.W. Brighton. Area 2,780 ac. Pop. 733.

PORTSMOUTH, a parl. and munic. bor., fortified seaport town, pa. and the principal naval station of England, co. Hants, hund. Portdown, at the S.W. extremity of Portsea Island, and at the entrance to its harbour, 95 m. S.W. London, on the Brighton and South Coast Railway, besides which, it is on a branch of the London and South-Western Railway. Lat. of observatory 50° 48' 0" N., lon. 1° 6' W. Area of bor., including also the town and pa. of Portsea, 5,090 ac. Pop. 72,096. Area of pa. 110 ac. Pop. 10,329. The town, which is the most perfect fortress in Great Britain, is enclosed by bastioned ramparts, faced with masonry, planted with elms, surrounded by trenches and out-works, and entered by 4 carriage ways. On its W. side is an insular quarter termed the "Point," bounding its commercial port in this quarter, facing the mouth of the harbour; some extensive additions have been recently made to the fortifications between the "Platform" and the "Round Tower." Principal buildings within the walls are the pa. church, with a cupola and vane 120 feet in height, garrison, Wesleyan, Independent, and Unitarian chapels, government house, town-hall, and gaol, market-house, marine and other barracks, the buildings of the philosophical society, almshouses, Green-row hall-rooms, theatre, workhouse, and breweries. The town of Portsea forms its N. suburb, separated from it by the mill-dam creek, but enclosed within an additional line of fortifications connected with those of Portsmouth. [PORTSEA.] Within this town is the naval dock yard, containing basins, wet and dry docks, large warehouses, anchor forges, iron and copper mills, rope-houses, and every department necessary in the construction and outfit of ships of war. In the dock-yard are also the royal naval college, a chapel, and the residence of the port admiral; the area, added to it on the N.E., is intended partly for the formation of building docks for war steamers; upwards of 2,000 workmen are employed in this yard. Between the dock-yard and the town of Port-mouth is the gun-wharf or arsenal, containing an armory with 30,000 stand of small arms, extensive artillery and ammunition depôts, and good quays bordering on the harbour. E. of the town ramparts and out-works are Southsea common and the suburb of Southsea, now frequented in summer as a watering place; on the shore facing Spithead and the Isle of Wight are Southsea castle, and farther E. ward Cumberland and some other forts, which, with Blockhouse and Monckton forts on the mainland S.W., protect Spithead and the approach to the harbour. Besides Portsea and Southsea, the large suburb of Landport, which extends almost to the centre of Portsea Island, is included in the bor., on the extreme limits of which are the barracks of Tipner and Hilesea. Haslar hospital and the victualling department at Gosport are dependencies of this port. Public institutions comprise a free grammar school, St Paul's academy, a mechanics' institute, savings' bank, general hospital, female penitentiary. Portsmouth communicates with Chichester and London by a canal, with Gosport by a floating bridge across the mouth of the harbour, by steam-packets with Ryde, Cowes, Southampton, Plymouth, Havre, and Dublin. Principal imports, coal, cattle, and sheep from W. England, corn and provisions from Ireland, and timber and wines from the continent. It sends 2 members to House of Commons, and is the polling-place for S. division of co.—Portsmouth Harbour is an inlet of the English Channel, W. of Portsea Island, about 4 m. in length by 5 or 6 m. in greatest breadth. At its entrance it is only 220 yards across, but within it the whole British navy might ride in perfect security. A new basin for steam-boats was completed in 1848. It contains several small islands; and on its shores, besides the town and establishments of Portsmouth and Portsea, are Gosport, Fareham, and Portchester.

PORTSMOUTH, two seaport towns and several minor places, U. S., North America.—I. New Hampshire, of which it is the largest town, though not the cap., on a peninsula in rt. b. of the Piscataqua, here crossed by two bridges, one 1,750 feet in length, 8 m from the Atlantic, 38 m. PORTUGAL, Lusitania, a country and kingdom of S.W. Europe, forming the W. portion of the Iberian peninsula, and situated between lat. 36° 57' and 49° 8' N., lon. 6° 15' and 9° 32' W., bounded E. and N. by Spain, S. and W. by the Atlantic Ocean, cap. Lisbon. Length N. to S. 368 m., breadth 80 to 140 m. Area and pop. as follow:—

Provinces.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. (1854)
Beira,	5,889	1,178,131
Estremadura,	7,229	747,616
Algarve,	2,044	820,514
Alentejo,	4,083	1,778,682
Islands adjacent,		314,284
Total,		3,117,231

The surface has a general inclination from N.E. to S.W. It is traversed by several mountain ranges, chiefly prolongations of the Spanish mountains.—I. the Serra Estrella, a continuation of the Serra de Gata, highest point 7,624 feet in elevation.—II. the Serra de Monchique, a continuation of the Serra Morena. N. and S. of these extend fine plains, watered by the Minho, the Duro, Tagus, and Guadiana, which enter the country from Spain, and with the Mondego and the Sado, rising in Portugal, all flow W. to the Atlantic Ocean. The largest plain is that of Alentejo, S. of the Tagus. There are no lakes in Portugal, but several salt marshes. The coast line, 500 m. in extent, presents along its shores many fine harbours. The climate, in general healthy, is especially so in the elevated coast regions, and on the plateaux of the interior; the exceptions are the vicinity of the salt marshes, and parts of the banks of the Tagus and Mondego. Mean temp. of year at Coimbra 63°; Lisbon 61° 3. Fahr. Rain is very abundant on the W. coast, especially in autumn. Snow is rare in the S. provs., but falls heavily on the mountains of the N. provs.; it lies permanently on Mount Gaviara (prov. Minho), 7,865 feet above the sea. Earthquakes occur frequently in the S., and in the vicinity of Lisbon. The soil is rich, husbandry is backward, and there are few passable roads. Wheat, barley, oats, flax, and hemp, are cultivated in the elevated tracts, rice in the lowlands, olives, oranges, lemons, citrons, figs, and almonds, in the central and S. provs., and at the S. extremity, the American aloes, the date, and other tropical plants. The cultivation of the vine is the most important branch of industry, and the produce of the vineyards, on the upper Douro, termed port, is the staple export. There are extensive forests of oak in the N., chestnut in the centre, and the sea pine, kermes, and cork in the S. The olive oil is of inferior quality. Mules and asses are the chief beasts of burden, oxen are used for draught in the provs. Cattle and sheep are reared in considerable numbers, but the wool is not of fine quality. Goats and swine are numerous, and fish abound in the rivers and on the coasts. Iron, marble, and salt, are the chief mineral products; the mines of tin, lead, and antimony, are not worked. There are numerous salt marshes on the coast, and upwards of 200 mineral springs. The manufactures are very limited, chiefly arms and porcelain, at Lisbon, woollens at Portalegre and Fundão, cotton spinning at Thomar, jewellery and trinkets at Lisbon and Oporto, glass at Marinha-Grande, paper at Alemquer, silks at Braganza and at Campo-Grande, near Lisbon. The government is a constitutional and hereditary monarchy, the religion of the state is Roman Catholic, but Protestants and Jews are tolerated. The church is governed by a patriarch, 5 archbishops, and 14 bishops. The inquisition was abolished in 1821, and its enormous revenues have been applied to state purposes. Educational establishments are very defective, with the exception of the cap., which contains extensive libraries, an observatory, and several literary & scientific institutions. Portugal, which forms the greater part of the ancient Lusitania, was successively conquered by the Romans in the 3d century B.C., by the Visigoths in the 6th century, by the Arabs in 712 and 715, and afterwards by the Christians of Spain. In 1189, Alphonse Henriquez, son of Henry of Burgundy, having gained a victory over the Moors at Ourique, was proclaimed the first king of Portugal. In 1348, one-half of the population died of the plague. The dynasty of Burgundy governed the country till 1380. About this period the country rose to the highest point of political and commercial splendour. The Portuguese discovered the greater part of the W. and S. coasts of Africa, and the maritime route to India, and founded numerous colonies; they also took possession of Brazil, & retained it till 1825, when it finally separated itself. On the invasion of the French in 1807, the royal family went to Brazil. From 1827 to 1833, the throne was usurped by Don Miguel; in 1836 several changes were introduced, and the present constitution was established. In 1854 railways were projected from Santarém to Oporto, W. and N. and S. by Aldea Galega, Évora, and Beja; and a line is in operation from Lisbon, by Santarém near l. b. of the Tagus, to Tancos, 75 m. The colonial possessions of Portugal are the Azores and Madeira islands, in the Atlantic Ocean; the governments of Cape Verde and Guinea, St Thomas, and Príncipe Island; the governments of Angola and Mozambique, in Africa. The general government of Asia comprises the possessions of Goa, the districts of Damão and Diu, in India; the province of Macao, in China, and a settlement in the island of Timor. The entire pop. of Portugal and its colonies in 1854, was 8,255,500. Army (1858) total men, 18,933; horses, 1,226. In the colonies 8,268 men. Navy, 23 sailing vessels, with 356 guns, and 1,861 men; and 5 steamers, with 6 guns, and 960 men.

PRUSSIA (Kingdom of) or PRUSSIAN STATES (Germ. Königreich von Preussen), a kingdom of Central Europe, situated between lat. 49° 7' and 55° 53' N., lon. 6° and 29° 50' E., comprising a great part of Germany, besides the provs. of Prussia and Posen, and the Swiss possessions, which are beyond its limits, cap. Berlin. Prussia is composed of two distinct, and very unequal portions, separated by Brunswick, Hesse, Waldeck, Lippe, and Nassau, for 30 m. at nearest point. The E. most and largest portion, or Prussia E. of the Weser, is bounded E. by Russia, S. by Austria, Saxony, and Electoral Hesse, W. by Brunswick, Hanover, and Mecklenburg, and N. by the Baltic Sea. The W. portion, or Rhenish Prussia (Rhein Prussen), is bounded E. by Hesse-Darmstadt, Nassau, Electoral Hesse, Waldeck, Brunswick, Lippe, and part of Hanover; S. by France, Rhenish Bavaria, and parts of Oldenburg and Hamburg; W. by the Netherlands, Belgium, and Luxemburg; and N. by Hanover. Besides these great portions, Prussia possesses the canton of Neuchâtel in Switzerland, and since 1850 the principality of Hohenzollern. The distance between the E. and W. extremities of Prussia, is 715 m.; the E. portion is 550 m. long, E. to W., and 185 to 435 m. broad, N. to S.; and the W. portion 250 m. in length, N. to S.; & 45 to 120 m. in breadth, E. to W. Population (1855) 16,958,430.

The surface of Prussia is in general flat, except in the prov. Saxony, where it is traversed by parts of the Harz mountains and the Thuringerwald, and in the S. between Silesia and Bohemia, by the Riesen Gebirge, or Giant mountains. The E. provs. belong to the basin of the Baltic, in which the chief rivers are, the Memel or Niemen, the Pregel, Vistula, and Oder, with its affluent the Warta. The W. provs. belong to the basin of the North Sea, and are watered by the Elbe, and its affluents the Saale, Havel, and Spree, the Weser, Rhine, and Rhine, with its affluents the Moselle and Lippe. The canal of Bromberg connects the Vistula with the Warta, the canal of Embs unites the Oder with the Havel, an affluent of the Elbe; and the canal of Frederick William connects the Oder with the Spree. The Rhine, which is here navigable for large vessels, and is celebrated for its picturesque beauty, separates Rhenish Prussia into two nearly equal parts, each of which has an elevated table-land and a low plain; the chief part of the table-land lies N. of the Moselle, on l. b. of the Rhine, and is called the Eifel and the Hohe Veer, 1,600 feet in elevation. This region is of basaltic formation, intermixed with tracts of lava; it presents evident traces of volcanic action. On the rt. b. of the Rhine, the table-land forms the elevated ridge of the Taunus, mean elevation about 2,000 feet, culminating point the Feldberg 2,850 feet; this table-land extends N. between the rivers Lahn and Sieg, where it is called the Westerwald, mean elevation 1,600 feet. The coasts of the Baltic are covered with extensive lagoons, the principal of which are the Curische-Haff at the mouth of the Niemen, the Frische-Haff at the mouths of the Vistula and Pregel, and the Stettiner-Haff at the mouth of the Oder. The E. provs. are remarkable for the great number of lakes they contain; of these, Lake Spirding has an area of 20 sq. m., and Lake Mauer is nearly as large. The islands of Prussia are Rugen, Usedom, and Wollin, in the Baltic. The climate of Prussia, generally temperate and salubrious, is humid and cold in the N., but in Rhenish Prussia it is warm enough for the production of excellent wine. Mean temperature of year in E. Prussia (Prussia proper), lat. 50° 30', at an elevation of 40 feet, 45°; Central Prussia, lat. 52° 30', elevation 210 feet, 48°; Rhenish Prussia, lat. 51°, elevation 250 feet, 49° 5, Fahr. Mean annual fall of rain, in the W. provs. 20 inches, decreasing toward the E. Prevailing winds W., and cold often severe. The soil is fertile in many places, and grain is produced in sufficient quantity for the dense population, and is even exported to a considerable extent. The most fertile dists. occur along the course of the Niemen and Vistula, on l. b. of the Oder, and on the Elbe, where the vicinity of Magdeburg is so fertile that it is called the granary of Berlin. The most barren region is the Tscheler Heide, in the prov. W. Prussia, 50 m. long and 25 m. broad, which is covered with sand, interspersed with stunted shrubs. The cap. is situated in an extensive sandy plain, which is interspersed with fertile tracts, and covered in some places with fine forests. Agriculture, which forms the chief source of national wealth, is carefully conducted; the principal crops are wheat, rye, oats, barley, flax, hemp, hops, and tobacco; fruit is not widely grown. The vine is cultivated in Rhenish Prussia, on the banks of the Moselle and Rhine, and to a small extent in detached districts of Central and E. Prussia. The pasturage is excellent; sheep, cattle, and horses, of improved breeds, are extensively reared; and wool is an important product. Goats are numerous in the mountain dists. of Silesia and Saxony; swine in Pomerania, Saxony, and Westphalia, which last is celebrated for its hams: wild boars, stags, fallow deer, hares, and rabbits, are plentiful, as are wolves and foxes; bears are seldom met with. The lynx, beaver, badger, otter, weasel, and marten, are common, but the ermine is rare. Wild geese are extremely numerous. Bees are extensively reared, and the breeding of the silk worm has recently assumed importance. Mines of iron, copper, and lead, are worked in the provs. of Rhenish Prussia and Westphalia, and in the Harz mountains; the mountains are well wooded, and contain marble and some of the precious stones. Alkali (a government monopoly) is found on the shores of the Baltic. The manufactures of Prussia are very extensive, and have recently become important; the chief branches are linens, in all the provs.; woollen cloths, and cottons, in Rhenish Prussia, at Barmen, Crefeld, and Elberfeld, silk stuffs, iron founding, carriage building, saddlery, chemical products, sugar refining, and brewing. The porcelain of Saxony, called Dresden china, is highly valued Commerce is very active in Prussia, and has been greatly developed by the establishment of the commercial customs union (Zollverein), by the many navigable rivers, excellent roads, and canals, and by railways, of which, 2,514 miles were opened in 1858 (Bismarck), connected with which are lines of telegraph extending to the chief points on the frontier. The chief exports are the productions of the soil and the manufactures of the country. Imports: colonial produce, cotton, silk, tobacco, printed calicoes, silks, etc. The population of Prussia comprises two principal races, — I the Germans who form the majority, — and II the Slavonians in the grand duchy of Posen, in Prussia Proper, and in a part of Upper Silesia. The government is a hereditary monarchy; the authority of the king is absolute, but modified by provincial estates, and further by a constitution, granted in 1847. The king is a member of the Zakuska for the German nation. The states are: except Prussia and Posen (slavonians) the religion of the royal family, and of the majority of the people, but all sects are tolerated. The following are the numbers of the different classes: — Protestants, 10,500,000; Roman Catholics, 6,232,293; Greek Church, 1,480; Monasteries, 14,700; and Jews, 226,000. Public instruction is more developed in Prussia than in any other country in Europe except Saxony; it possesses the celebrated universities of Berlin, Halle, and Bonn, besides those of Breslau, Göttingen, and Königsberg, and numerous literary and learned societies. The system of education established by the government is of a thoroughly practical nature and is considered the most complete and efficient in Europe. The different classes of schools are: I the elementary school at which the great majority of the people receive their education; — II the city school, which is always attached to a gymnasium; — III the gymnasium, in which Latin and Greek are taught. In most of the small towns are normal schools for the training of teachers. The universities are all under the control of the government. In 1841 there were in all 27,000 schools in Prussia, of which 21,646 were elementary schools and in 1849 2,454,062 pupils were attending the primary schools. Attendance at school is compulsory from the ages of 5 until 14 years. In the middle of the 13th century, the Teutonic knights subjugated Prussia, and converted the people to Christianity. Albert of Brandenburg, grand master of the order, appropriated the country in 1525, his family augmented these possessions, and Frederick, one of his descendants, obtained the title of king in 1701; he acquired the principality of Neuchâtel in Switzerland. By the treaty of Utrecht William I obtained a portion of the duchy of Gelder, he acquired the duchy of Lüneburg and took from Sweden the greater part of Pomerania. Frederick in the Great conquered Silesia, which was abandoned by Austria in 1742; this king and his successor took part in the dismemberment of Poland, and thus acquired the grand duchy of Posen. By the treaty of Tilsit in 1807, Prussia was deprived of all her possessions between the Rhine and the Elbe, and the greater part of Prussian Poland, but in 1815, after the fall of Napoleon I., the Congress of Vienna restored all these states, except a part of Poland, and at the same time granted to Prussia a part of Saxony, and the duchy of the Lower Rhine. Military service for 3 years is imperative on all the male pop., who subsequently form the Landwehr, the 1st battalion of which is composed of men from 25 to 32, and the 2d, men from 32 to 38 years of age. The Landsturm comprises all others capable of bearing arms between the ages of 17 and 50. In 1854, the standing army was 125,000 men. The royal navy was composed of 1 frigate of 48 guns, 1 corvette of 12 guns, 2 schooners, 42 gun-boats, 3 steamers, 1 steamer under repair, and 4 other vessels in course of construction, being a total of 54 ships, carrying in all 288 guns. Public rev. (1841) 102,090,484 dollars; expenses 101,410,477 dollars. Public debt, with interest, 1st January 1849, 162,861,444 dollars.

Length N.E. to S.W., from Nobra in Ladakh to the confluence of the Indus and Punjab, about 600 m. Breadth, from Rampur to Derbend, 350 m. Area of the Punjab Proper 78,000 sq. m. Pop. estimated at 4,740,000, consisting of Sikhs, Cashmerians, and Afghans. The N. part of the state is a range of mountains, 30,000 to 27,000 feet above the sea. The W. range, enclosing the valley of the Indus, is of granite and primary rocks. The Rupshu Spiti and adjacent part of Ladakh, are of secondary strata, with organic remains; the E. Cashmerians are volcanic and basaltic, with limestones. S. of lat. 34° , the country rapidly slopes to the alluvial plain of the Punjab, which extends for several hundred miles without any considerable eminence except the salt ranges at the base of the Himalaya, which contain immense beds of rock-salt, as also alum, sulphur, nitre, coal, and gypsum. The great plain is divided by the intercourses of its rivers into five doabs. The soil in general is sandy and barren, but with many fertile spots fertilized, and there are abundant means of irrigation. Summer temperature of the plains extensively hot and dry; winter cool, with frost at intervals. Temperature at Lahore in June, in the shade, 112° Fahr. The vegetation of the Punjab resembles that of Eastern India. The sugar-cane, palm, orange, and other fruit-trees flourish, and all kinds of grain crops are raised, as well as opium, indigo, and tobacco. Camels, buffaloes, and horses, are reared in the extensive pasture lands, but rural industry is by no means generally practised. Silk and cotton fabrics, carpets, shawls, and warlike arms, are manufactured in the towns. A considerable transit trade is carried on in goods imported from eastern India and carried westward; bullion, silk, drugs, and dyes being received in return. The population is of a mixed kind. In the N. are Tibetan Mongolians, and the remains of former Afghan conquerors are scattered over the whole country; the great majority of the people are Panjab Jats, descendants of Hindoo Rajpoot Jats; the Khalsa Sikh population may amount to 500,000. Their religion, originally supposed to have been a pure deism, is now a modification of Hindooism; they have no castes, and the military profession is open to all. Their morals are depraved and sensual. In person the Sikhs resemble the Hindoos, but are of more robust and active habits than the natives of Middle India, and they excel in warlike enterprise. The Sikh government, a military despotism, extends over the whole of the Punjab, Kashmir, Ladakh, and Bulh, Peshawar W. of the Indus, and the Derajat as far S. as the frontier of Scinde. The revenue was formerly estimated at about 2,500,000*l.* annually. Runjeet Singh had an army of 75,000 men. Principal towns, Lahore, the cap., Amritsar, Serinagar, Mooltan, Peshawar, Jullinder, Jalaipoor. The Punjab was the scene of Alexander the Great's oriental conquests. At the beginning of the 10th century, it was overrun by Mahommed of Ghuznee "the destroyer;" subsequently it was conquered by the Afghans, and in 1538 by Baber the Mogul conqueror. Under the late Runjeet Singh, the power and boundaries of the kingdom were greatly extended; on his death in 1839, and the subsequent massacres of his nearest heirs, the country became the scene of anarchy. An unprovoked invasion of the British territories E. of the Sutlej by a powerful army of the Sikhs in 1845, led to a series of British victories at Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Aliwal, and Sabraon, and their submission by treaty in 1846. This treaty was again broken by Shere Singh in 1848, and the Sikh force was finally defeated and dispersed at Goojerat, 21st February 1849. The Punjab was then formally annexed to the British possessions in India.

FRYNESES, Pyrenæi Montes, an extensive mountain chain of Europe, forming the limit between France and Spain, and extending in a direction S.E. to N.N.W. from Cape Creux on the Mediterranean in the E. to near Fuenterabia on the W., a distance of 270 m.; with a breadth of from 50 to 100 m.; it is joined on the W. by the Cantabrian mountains, which may be considered a prolongation of the chain. Next to the Alps, the Pyrenæes are in general the highest mountains of Europe; the summit of the chain forms a curved line with a mean altitude of 7,900 feet. The slope is much more gentle on the N. than on the S. side. On the N. side the mountains send off numerous offsets which cover part of the French depts., and the descent is more gradual on the W. than at the E. extremity. The primary formation is less extensive than in the Alps; it consists of granite, micaceous schist, and primitive limestone, which form a continuous band stretching three-fourths across the isthmus. The bulk of the system is composed of secondary rocks, which are arranged in vertical bands flanking the older rocks, and consist of clay-slate, granwacke, and blue limestone. The colite and chalk formations occur on the lower part of the chain. Snow lies deep in the mountains during a great part of the year, and is perpetual on the higher points. The elevation of the snow line is 8,600 feet. From the Marbore to Maladetta the summits are covered with broad bands of ice, yet no true glaciers have been discovered. Corn grows in some of the upper valleys, maize is cultivated at the vill. of Lescar (Lower Pyrenæes), at an elevation of 2,200 feet, and the pine tree grows at 10,870 feet above the sea. The bear is found in the high desert regions near the snow line, and the lynx ascends to 8,300 feet. The principal summits are Pic Nethou (Maladetta), 11,168 feet; Mont Perdú, 10,904 feet; the Vignemale, 10,820 feet; Pic du Midi, 9,540 feet; and Le Canigou, 9,137 feet. The principal passes of the Pyrenæes are, from E. to W., Port d'Os, 9,943 feet; the Brèche de Roland, 8,500 feet; d'Estanès, 8,402 ft.; Tourmalet, 7,143 ft.; Gavarnie, 7,054 feet, above the level of the sea; there are about 60 in all, of which the following are fit for carriages.—I. the Col de Pertus, between Perpignan and Jonquera, passable at all seasons.—II. the pass of Paymorrens between the valley of Segre and that of the Arize.—III. The Port de Confrance between Zaragoza and Pan.—IV. the Port of Roncervaux, between Pamplona and San Juan.—V. the pass of the Bidasoa, between Vitoria and Bayonne. The chief rivers rising in the Pyrenæes, are the Adour, Garonne, and Aude, flowing N., and the Loiret and numerous affluents of the Rhod flowing E. The Pyrenæes contain great stores of copper and argentiferous lead-ore were formerly worked, but are now abandoned. Several of the streams are auriferous, but no gold or silver mines are worked. The valley of Cardous contains a remarkable deposit of rock-salt, one of the beds measuring 200 by 750 feet. The Pyrenæes give their name to three depts. of France.

FRYNESES (BASSES or LOWES), a frontier prov. of France, formed of part of the old prov. Bearn, bounded E. by the dep. H. Pyrenæes, S. by the Pyrenæes, W. by the Bay of Biscay, on which are the ports of Bayonne and St. Jean-de-Luz, and N. by the depts. Landes and Gers. Area 2,928 sq. m. Pop. 446,997.—Cap. Pau.—Nearly half the surface is covered with pastures and marshes, one-sixth part is occupied by fine forests, and the rest is fertile. Numerous torrents descend from the mountains, the chief of which are the Gave-de-Pau, Gave d'Oleron, and the Nive. Minerals comprise iron, copper, and marble. The mineral springs of Eaux-Bonnes and Eaux-Chaudes are well frequented, and the salt from the springs of Salies is in repute. Among vegetable products are the oak, gall-nut, hnt, and wine; and among animals, the bear, and isard, a species of chamois. Manufactures unimportant; the chief are iron forging, and manufactures of linen and paper. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Bayonne, Mauleon, Oloron, Orthes, and Pau.

FRYNESES (HANTES or UPPER), a frontier dep. of France, S.E. of the former, composed of part of the old prov. Gasconne, having E. the dep. H. Garonne, and N. Gers. Area 1,800 sq. m. Pop. 250,934. Surface covered by the ramifications of the Pyrenæes enclosing the fine valleys of Adour, Campan, Barèges, Cauterets, and Azun. The Adour, and its affluents the Arros and Gave-de-Pau, rise in the dep., the soil contains numerous minerals, but only marble is quarried. The mineral springs of Bagueres, Barèges, and Cauterets, are much frequented. Soil fertile in the valleys, but grain is insufficient for the wants of the population. Wine is abundant and of good quality. Cattle are extensively reared, horses are excellent, and the sheep are protected from the wolves by the powerful dogs of the Pyrenæes. The chief manufs. are those of woollen stuffs called Barèges. The dep. is divided into the arronds Argeles, Bagueres, and Taibes.

FRYNESES-ORIENTALES, a dep. of France, separated from the former by the dep. Arize, and bounded E. by the Mediterranean, N. by the dep. Aude, and comprised in the old prov. Roussillon and part of Languedoc. Area 1,583 sq. m. Pop. 151,565. The Pyrenæes on the S. separate the dep. from Spain and connect it with their counterparts; the highest point in the dep. is Canigou 9,137 ft. Chief rivers the Tet, Gly, and Aude, flowing E. to the Mediterranean, the Arize affluent of the Garonne, and the Segre affluent of the Ebro. On the coast are the marishes of Leucate and St. Nazaire, and the ports Collioure, Port Vendres, Bagnols, and Nouvelle. The soil contains iron, antimony, fine marble, and mineral springs. Climate cold in the mountains, but sufficiently mild in the valleys for the culture of the pomegranate and the mulberry. The orange grows here on espaliers. The wines of Roussillon are esteemed. Manufs. are unimportant. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Carat, Perpignan, and Prades.

FRYNESES (AUSTRALIAN) is a name given to a range of mountains in the colony of Victoria, between the Australian Alps and Grampians, their principal summits being Mount Cole, Byng, and Campbell.

RED RIVER or NATCHITOCHKA, a river of the United States territory, North America, in its upper part called the Aracataca, rises at the base of the Rocky Mountains, near Santa Fé, Mexico, flows at first E, forming the limit between Texas and the Ozark and Arkansas territories, and then S E through Louisiana, and joins the Mississippi 128 m N W New Orleans.
Total course estimated at 1,500 m. About 100 m above the latter commences the raft, where, by vast collections of fallen timber, the river is expanded to a breadth of 30 or 40 m, for 10 or 16
m. of its course, and divided into numerous channels. The United States government have, at a great expense, removed the timbers in various places, and rendered the river navigable for steam-boats for 400 miles from its mouth. Afluents, the Washita and False-Washita.

Red Sea or Arabian Gulf, an inland sea between Africa and Asia (Arabia), lat. 12° 40' to 30° N., lon. 32° 30' to 43° 30' E. Length, N.W. to S.E., upwards of 1,400 m.; breadth varies to nearly 200 m. At its S. extremity it communicates with the Indian Ocean by the Strait Babel-Mandeb. In its N. part it bifurcates into the Gulfs of Suex and Akabah, which enclose the peninsula of Sinai. Depth varies, average about 100 fathoms. It abounds with islands and coral reefs, and is supposed to have derived its name from the red coral and pink-coloured fuci which it yields; or from the anc. Idumea, "Sea of Edom" or "Red Sea;" or from the blood-red colour frequently imparted to it from animalcules. The country almost everywhere around it is mountainous. The S.E. monsoon blows constantly for eight months of the year, and during the remainder, the N.W. monsoon. From October to May, when S. winds prevail, the water rises in the N. part of the sea, which then attains an elevation much higher than the Mediterranean, but from careful levelings it has been ascertained that the low water levels of the Red Sea and Mediterranean are identical. The navigation is difficult owing to sudden changes of wind and heavy gales. Principal ports are Moeha, Hodeida, Lohia, Jiddah, and Yembo on the Arabian side, and Suex, Kussair, Suakin, and Massawah on the Egyptian, Nubian, and Danakil coasts. The Jews and Phœnicians appear to have carried on an extensive trade upon this sea, and after the destruction of the Persian empire, it resumed importance as the principal route of traffic between Europe and the East, which distinction it retained until the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. It has again recovered some of its ancient consequence, as part of the direct route between Europe and India. [Aden—Babel-Mandeb.]

The soil is rich in mines of iron and coal, is well cultivated, and fertile in corn, wine, tobacco, beet-root, linseed, and hemp. One-third of its surface is covered with forests. It has numerous manufactures, and its commerce is facilitated by the canal of the Rhine and Rhone, and several other canals, and by the Strasbourg and Basle Railway. The dep. is divided into the arrondissements Strasbourg, Saverne, Schelestadt, and Weissenbourg.

RHINAU, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Bas-Rhin, 13 m N E Schelestadt. Pop. 1,438.

RHINE (German Rhein, anc. Rhenus), an important and celebrated river of Europe, is formed in Switzerland by the union of two small streams, the Emser and Vorder Rhein; the first springs from the glacier of Rheinwald, and the second rises on the N. side of Mount St. Gothard at a height of 7,650 feet, these meet at Reichenau in the canton Grisons. The united stream flows generally N. past Meyenfeld, and enters the Lake of Constance on the S E near Rheineck, at Stein it quits the lake at its W. extremity, flows W. past Schaffhausen and Laufenburg, separating Switzerland from Bavaria. At Basle, where the Upper Rhine terminates with an elevation of 755 feet, and a breadth of 500 feet, it turns to the N. and flows past Breisach and Strasbourg, Speyer and Mannheim, where its bed is 300 feet above the sea, between the territories of Baden on the E, and France and Rhenish Bavaria on the W. From Worms to Mayence, it traverses the Hessian territories. At Mayence it receives the Main, and flows W. to Bingen, where it turns to the N. W., passing Coblenz, Bonn, Cologne, and Düsseldorf (near which it attains its greatest breadth 2,300 feet), Wesel and Emmerich, where its course is again westerly, till entering the Netherlands it reaches the North Sea by several branches, having a delta larger than that of any other European river. [See RHENELANDS.] The principal affluents of the Rhine are on right, the Kinzig, Neckar, Main, Lahn, Ruhr, Lippe, and on left, the Thur, Aa, Ille, and Moselle. From Chur to Basle, the Rhine is only partially navigable, on account of the rapidity of its current, the numerous rocks which impede it, and its waterfalls, the greatest of which is at Laufen near Schaffhausen, where it falls 80 feet. From Basle to the sea, the navigation for steamers and large barges is continuous. In September 1853, it rose 13 feet above its highest water mark, and overflowed the country near Strasbourg. In the Netherlands it is connected by canals with its several branches and with the sea. The Great North Canal unites it to the Meuse and the Nijne, affluents of the Scheldt, and the canal of the Rhône and Rhine in France connects it with the Rhone by the Saône. In Bavaria it communicates with the Danube by means of the Main, and the Altmühl and Ludwig Canals. The direct distance of the Rhine from its source to its mouth is 360 m., following its windings it is about 900 m., and its basin comprises an area of 63,290 sq. m. The Rhine gives name to 3 circles of Baden, to a prov. of Hessen Darmstadt, a prov. of Bavaria, 2 depts. of France, and a prov. of Prussia. Rhine Configuration. [GERMANY.]

On the N E side two piers enclose a harbour, having in its centre from 16 to 18 fathoms water, and on its N side is another pier of nearly equal depth. The city has 31 mosques, a Jews' quarter and several synagogues, the mercant hospital of the knights, now used as a barracks, and an armoury. Many of its houses are unoccupied. Outside of the walls, on the N, are the pasha's palace, the divan and a Roman Catholic quarter, with a church and school. Of the city are the Greek suburbs with about 3,000 inhabitants, and 10 churches. Rhodes has 3 Mohammedan colleges, a Turkish library, Turkish and Greek schools, and manufactures of red leather, and shoes for export. It is the residence of a Greek consul, first vice consul and several vice consular agents. In ancient times it was a celebrated Greek city, and boasted of the famous Colossus—one of the seven wonders of the world—which stood at the entrance of its harbour. After the destruction of its republic it belonged successively to the Romans, the Greek emperors, the Genoese, and the knights of St John of Jerusalem, who held it from 1306 to 1522, when, after a heroic resistance, it capitulated to the Turkish sultan. It was under the command of the Magister.

Its port, which is large and deep, is defended by a castle. Rio consists of an old and a new town, the latter of which dates from 1808, and is separated from the former by an open space called the Campo do Honra: it extends on uneven ground, along the side of the bay. Streets generally straight, but narrow and ill-paved. It is so placed as to be deprived of the benefit of the land breeze, by a range of mountains, and is exposed to suffocating heat, relieved only by the sea breeze in the middle of the day. The city is supplied with water by means of an aqueduct, which traverses a deep valley 7 m. in length, and has numerous public fountains. The churches, of which there are upwards of 50, have no external elegance, but are mostly richly decorated in the interior. The chief public edifices are the Imperial palace, a plain brick building, the old palace on the shore, used for public offices, the naval and military arsenal, and a public hospital. Its educational establishments are the Imperial college of Don Pedro II., the college of St. José, schools of medicine and surgery, military and naval academy, and many public schools. The national library has 120,000 printed volumes, and valuable MSS. Rio is the see of a bishop, the residence of a governor, and the seat of an electoral college, which had, in 1844, 260 electors; it has many scientific establishments, a museum of natural history rich in ethnology and mineralogy, an alcazar or theatre, and a public botanic garden. From its position, Rio is naturally the great mart of Brazil, and especially of the provs. Minas Geraes, St. Paul and Goyas, and its advantages are such as to fit it for concentrating the commerce of the globe. Its imports comprise the products of every country; its chief exports are cotton, sugar, coffee, rum, building timber, leather, tallow, gold, diamonds, topazes, amethysts, and aquamarines. The Bay, or inlet of Rio, 17 m. in length, and 11 m. in extreme width, forms one of the noblest harbours in the world. Its entrance,

3 m. S. of the city, is 1½ m. wide between Fort Santa Cruz on the E., and a fort on the sugar loaf rock on the W. The bay contains many small islands, the largest of which is Ilha do Governador, 6 m. in length. Upwards of 80,000 slaves are calculated to have been imported into Rio in 1847.

RIO DE LA PASION, a river of Central America, rises in the Lake Lacandon, British Honduras, flows W., and in 72 m. N.W. RIO NEGRO or PARANA, a river of Colombia and Brazil, is the principal tributary of the Amazon, on the N. side, and under the name of the Guania, rises in New Granada, near lat. 2° N., lon. 72° W. It flows generally E.S.E., enters the prov. Para, and joins the Amazon in lat. 3° 10' S., lon. 50° W. Total course has been estimated at 1,000 m. Principal affs, the Ubaupes, Cababuri, Padavari, and Rio Branco. At its mouth it is scarcely 1½ m. in breadth, but a little higher up it is nearly 8 m., and opposite Barcellos, 15 m. across. It contains numerous islands, and has a remarkable communication with the Orinoco by the navigable Casiquiare. {CASQUIARE}

RIO NEGRO or SALTIC, a river of S. America, forming the whole boundary between the territory of the Plata Confederation and Patagonia. It appears to rise in a lake at the foot of the Chilean Andes, and after an E. course of 600 or 700 m., enters the Atlantic Ocean in lat. 41° 4' S., lon. 62° 50' W., 20 m. S.W. the mouth of the river Colorado. At its mouth it is 2 m. across, but at Carmen, 16 m. inland, its breadth is less than 200 yards, and 4 m. higher it becomes wholly unfit to be navigated. Its bed abounds with shoals and islands, course rapid, and 4½ m. from its mouth is a dangerous bar. Soil of its banks, in the lower part of its course, is fertile, and around Carmen wheat and barley are raised; and many sheep and excellent horses are reared; near its head also there is reported to be a country abounding in fine timber, but the intermediate region is frequently sterile. The predatory Indians of the Rio Negro receive yerba, tobacco, wool, and spirits at Carmen, in exchange for woollen pouches, horse rugs, bolas, lassos, and skins, which with horses, sheep, salt, and ostrich feathers, form exports from that settlement.—II. a river of Uruguay, the central part of which it drains, enters the Uruguay river, 80 m. ROCKY MOUNTAINS, an extensive mountain range of North America, commencing on the S., with the plateaus and cordilleras of Mexico and California, and terminating on the N., in the broken ridges of Russian America. It covers the whole western side of the continent; is 4,600 m. in length from Mexico to the Arctic coast. There are three separate parallel belts.—1st, the lofty double chain of the Rocky Mountains Proper on the E.; 2d, the range of high and wide broken table-lands lying W. of that chain; and lastly, a lofty mountainous chain, partially volcanic, rugged and convulsed, the Pacific Alps of the N.W. coast, the cascade range of Oregon, and the Sierra Nevada of California.—I. Chain of the Rocky Mountains Proper is an elevated and complex system of mountain summits, and included table-lands, embracing two, and in some places three principal mountain ranges, which, with their component ridges, are approximately parallel for great distances, but their lesser sections variously diverge and mosaiculate. In Northern Mexico the E. range is called the Cordillera of Cohahuila and Potosi, the Guadalupe Mountains being an eastern outlying branch. The western range is named the Sierra de los Mimbres, and Sierra Madre. Further N., at the sources of the Arkansas, the E. belt is the Moro and Chowatche or Wet Mountain; and the W. the Sierra Verde or San Juan. Between these two ranges is included the valley of Santa Fé, or of Rio del Norte, an extensive and fertile plain. From the Arkansas to the N. fork of the Platte, the chain is triple and very complex, and its central range, called the Medicine Bow Mountains, contains the Spanish, Pike, Long, and Paramie Peaks, which have an elevation of from 10,000 to 12,000 feet above the sea. Fremont Peak, in the Wind River Mountains, has an elevation of 13,669 feet; from its base flow the head streams of the Missouri, the Columbia, and the Rio Colorado. Near lat. 44° is the N. end of the Wahsatch, a long and lofty mountain range, which passes W. of the Green River or Upper Colorado, and forms the E. boundary of the Utah basin. Strictly, this is not a ridge of the chain of the Rocky Mountains Proper, although originating near that chain—its trend and structure are different. To the N. of the Wind River range, the E. axis is much elevated, where it separates the middle and north sources of the Columbia River from the streams of the Missouri and Saskatchewan. Near the head of the latter stream is the peak of Mount Hooker, 15,700 feet above the sea, and further N. Mount Brown, 15,990 feet in elevation. Hence, the chain gradually declines in level to the Arctic Ocean. Comparatively little is known of the geological formation of the Rocky Mountain chain. Granitic and gneissic rocks, various palaeozoic strata, including carboniferous limestones, have been seen. Between the highest ridges vast plateaus, seemingly of cretaceous and tertiary deposits. It has recently been ascertained that the chief rivers and streams flow round the ends of the long ridges, rather than through gorges cutting them. This important fact reveals great facilities for the formation of railways uniting the coasts of the Atlantic and Pacific, through this mountain chain.—II. The Great Interior Plateau is a wide and elevated middle belt, between the Rocky Mountains Proper on the E., the Pacific Alps and Sierra Nevada on the W., and stretches from the Gulf of California to the Arctic Ocean, having a mean elevation of nearly 5,000 feet above the sea. It is naturally divided into three regions, a central, S., and N.—III. The Pacific Alps is the W. belt of the elevated zone of North America. It runs generally parallel to the chain of the Rocky Mountains proper, N. from the peninsula of California, where it is rather low, increasing in height and breadth in the N. part of California, and thence to Russian America, a broad and elevated chain of mountains. In the vicinity of Columbia River are the peaks of Mount Jefferson, Mount Hood, and Mount St. Helens, which are upwards of 15,000 feet, above the sea. Mounts St. Helens and Regnier are active volcanoes. Mount Fairweather, 14,782 feet, and Mount St. Elias, 17,850 feet in elevation above the sea, are volcanoes, and supposed to be occasionally in a state of eruption. It is presumed that these are the loftiest peaks in North America.

ROME (Ital. Roma), a city of Italy, cap. of the Pontifical States, and formerly the metropolis of the greater part of the world known to the ancients, is situated on the Tiber, 17 m. N.E. its mouth in the Mediterranean. Lat. of the Roman College 41° 53' 52" N., lon. 12° 28' 40" E.; elevation above the sea, on the Tiber, under the Ælian Bridge, 20 feet. Pop. (1900) 153,000; (1838) 170,701; (1846) 180,200, including 18,650 visitors; (1856) 178,798, exclusive of visitors. The city is built on marshy ground, at the foot of a range of low hills, and is separated by the Tiber into two unequal portions, which are divided into 14 Rioni or quarters; of these 12 are in Rome proper, or the space on the E. or l. b. of the river, and only 2 on the W. or rt. b., called the Leonine city or Trastevere; in the former are the Vatican and the Castle of St. Angelo. Its walls are 12 m. in circumference, and are pierced for 16 gates, 4 of which are built up,—the finest are the Porta del Popolo on the N., and the Porta San Giovanni on the S. of the city. Little more than one-third of the space within its walls is inhabited, most of the space S. of the capital being used as gardens and vineyards. The most populous part of the modern city occupies the site of the ancient Campus Martius, a plain extending between the Capitoline, Quirinal, Pincian hills, and the river. The Tiber, within the walls, has a winding course of 3 miles. It is navigable for large boats and river steamers; after heavy rains it frequently rises 20 or 30 feet, and inundates a great part of the city. Near the middle of its course the Tiber forms an island, called S. Bartolomeo, 900 feet long and 300 feet broad, connected with the mainland by 2 bridges; besides which, the only others are the Ponte Sisto, the Ponte Rotto, now converted into a suspension bridge, & the Ponte S. Angelo, the latter connecting the city with the Castle of St. Angelo, the chapel of Rome, which serves for a state palaces. The three principal thoroughfares of Rome diverge from the Piazza del Popolo, an irregular open space at its N. extremity; the central of these, the Corso, extends in a direct line 3.3.3. for about a mile. There are in all 506 streets, 275 lanes, and 149 squares, of all dimensions; most of these are ornamented with richly sculptured fountains, of which there are in Rome 150. These are supplied with excellent water by 3 aqueducts; the finest is called Acqua Vergine, — the others are Acqua Felice and Acqua Paola. Notwithstanding its architectural and artistical riches, modern Rome has a sad and desolate aspect. Most of the streets are narrow, dirty, and unpaved; in these the finest palaces and the most wretched hovels are often seen side by side. Near the Capitoline Mount is the Ghetto or Jews' quarter, a filthy space, enclosed by walls with gates, under charge of the police, within which 4,000 or 7,000 Jews reside. The situation of Rome is unhealthy, especially in summer, from the effects of malarial; but, from the mildness of its winter climate, it is a favourite resort for invalids. The mean temp. of the year is 58°·3, winter 44°·5, summer 75° Fahr. Frost seldom lasts over the night, and snow falls only on an average 14 days in the year; but, in the severe season of 1812, the ponds were frozen over for several days. Rome has 354 churches, many of which are remarkable for their architecture and their decorations; of these the cathedral of St Peter's is the largest and most sumptuous in the world. It was founded in 1450, and its building occupied 176 years; it was planned and commenced by Bramante, but altered and carried on by Raphael, and Michael Angelo Buonarroti. It was dedicated 18th November 1626. Length of the cathedral 613 feet, width 296 feet, height to top of cross 434 feet. The church of St John Lateran, in which the Popes were crowned, is the mother church of Rome, and contains the gorgeous Corsini chapel. The Palace of the Vatican, adjoining St Peter's, is said to contain 4,433 halls, chapels, and other apartments; it became the permanent residence of the Popes after their return from Avignon in 1377. Its galleries and halls, and the Sixtine chapel, decorated by Raphael and Michael Angelo, contain the most choice paintings and statues, including the portion of those carried off by the French, which were restored in 1815. A series of its galleries, splendidly decorated with statues and marbles, contain the famous library of the Vatican, which is estimated to comprise 30,000 printed books, though generally supposed to amount to 100,000 volumes, and 22,500 MSS in all languages. Its museum of sculpture, the richest in the world, contains among other specimens the Apollo Belvidere, the Torso, and the Laocoon. The superb palace of the Quirinal, or palace of Monte Cavallo, is surrounded by extensive gardens; attached to this is the palace called the Dataria Apostolica, whence the pontifical bulls are issued. In the square of the Quirinal is the palace of the Consistory, seat of the supreme tribunal. The palace of Belvidere contains the archives of Rome. In the Campidoglio, or modern capitol, forming three sides of a square, are the palace of the senator of Rome, that of the conservatori, the Capitoline museum, rich in objects of art and antiquities; between these is placed the famous bronze statue of Marcus Aurelius. There are upwards of 60 splendid private palaces; the finest of these are the Barberini palace, the Doria palace, remarkable for its extent and its gallery of paintings, the Colonna palace for its gardens, the Borghese and Farnese palaces, the latter celebrated for its architecture. The villas or residences of the Roman nobles in the suburbs of the city, are situated amidst orange and citron groves; they are ornamented with fountains and statues; the most magnificent of these is the villa Borgese, on the Pincian hill, outside of the Porta del Popolo, with gardens 3 miles in circuit, which were much injured during the revolution of 1849. The Villa Medici, formerly celebrated for its Venus, now belongs to the French government, and an annual exhibition of pictures by French artists is held here. Of the many scientific and literary establishments, the university of Rome has the first rank. It was founded in 1244, as a school for the canon and civil law. Succeeding Popes have enlarged and added new chairs. There are now 42 professors, and it is well attended. The chief of the others are the Roman college founded by the Jesuits, with a rich library and museums of natural history and antiquities, and a celebrated observatory; the college of the Propaganda, in which natives from all parts of the world are trained as missionaries for the spread of the Roman Catholic faith, and to which a celebrated printing establishment is attached. In the institution of the Ripa Grande 800 children are instructed in arts and trades; and there are numerous schools of painting, sculpture, and architecture. The principal academies are, that called degli Arcadi, one of the oldest and most celebrated in Europe, Acad. Aroheologica, Acad. de Lincei, etc. and the academies of theology, archaeology, the Tiberina, and others. Next to the library of the Vatican, the chief public libraries are the Casanatense in the convent of Minerva, with 120,000 vols.; the Angelica library, with 24,820 printed vols., and 2,945 MSS. Besides the museums of the Vatican and the Capitol, the public collections comprise museums of anatomy, natural history, mineralogy, antiquities, and mosaics, and there are numerous and valuable private collections. Rome has at present 8 theatres, the finest of which is that of Apollo, on the Tiber, near the bridge of St Angelo, a deaf-mute institution, and numerous hospitals and benevolent institutions, orphan hospitals, and houses of industry, the chief of which are the hospitals of San Spirito, the Holy Trinity, St Louis, and St Michael. The Protestant cemetery is situated near the Pyramid of Caus Cestius. The chief industry of the inhabitants of Rome is connected with the production of articles of art, and the supply of the numerous artists, invalids, and other visitors; its few manufactures are confined to woollen and silk fabrics, hats, gloves, strings for musical instruments, artificial feathers, false pearls, mosaics, jewellery, trinkets, coarse glass, and pottery. Many of the population are occupied in attendance on the ecclesiastical courts. In 1848 there were in Rome 23 cardinals, 29 bishops, 124 prelates, 1,738 secular clergy, 2,488 regular clergy, and 1,748 nuns. The noble remains of ancient Rome comprise the Foro Etrusco, now the bridge of St Angelo, the Colonna Maxima, a great subterranean tunnel still in good repair, the aqueducts already mentioned, the circus of Romulus, and the circus Maximus, the coliseum, remains of the theatre of Marcellus, the pantheon, a part of the Thermae of Agrippa, those of Caracalla, Diocletian, Nerva, Titus, etc.; the triumphal arches of Titus, Constantine, and Septimius Severus; the columns of Antonine and Trajan, several Egyptian shelids, the Roman forum, now called Camps Vaeolus. Rome was founded by Romulus 754 a.c. In the two centuries preceding the Christian era, its dominion extended over all the countries of the Mediterranean; its territories were further extended by the first emperors; but in the 5th century, the barbarians of the N. and E. deprived it of several provs. The city was taken by Alaric in 410, and by Genseric in 455. It passed successively under the domination of the Ostrogoths and the Emperors of the East; it was given to the Popes by Pepin and Charlemagne in the 8th century, and then became cap. of the States of the Church. From 1809 till 1814, it was cap. of the dep. Rome in the French empire under Napoleon I. In 1848, an insurrection broke out after the assassination of Count Rossi, the Pope's prime minister, 16th November; the Pope fled in disguise on the 24th. A republican form of government was attempted in 1849, when on the 8th February, the national assembly declared the Pope divested of all temporal power, but this was overturned by the intervention of a French force, which now has possession of Rome, the Pope having returned.

RUSSIA (EMPIRE or), the largest state in the world, extending in Europe, Asia, and America, between lat. 36° 20' and 71° 24' N., lon. 160° E. to 167° 59' W. Surface estimated to comprise 1/26th of the superficies of the globe, 1/7th of its land, and more than double the extent of Europe, the total area being 7,612,874 sq. m. It is but thinly peopled, the population being in 1851 (Russian estimate) 65,337,417, or including the Caucasus and Kyrgyz, 68,700,000. Capital, St. Petersburg. The Russian empire contains a greater number of distinct races than any other country, comprising Slavonians, Lettons, Germans, Caucasians, Jews, Walachians, Greeks, Persians, Indians, Samoyeds, Tartars, Tunguses, and Turks. The established religion of the empire is that of the Greek Church, which is estimated to comprise 49,000,000 of the population, Roman Catholics 7,500,000; Lutherans, Reformed Churchmen, and Moravians, 3,600,000; Mohammedans, 2,400,000; Jews, 1,500,000; Buddhists, etc., 600,000; and Armenian Catholics and Armenian Georgians, 1,000,000. It is usual to treat of the empire as divided into European, Asiatic, and American Russia, although these divisions are not officially recognised, and several of the govts., as Perm and Orenburg, are partly in Europe and partly in Asia. The relative area and population of the empire, according to the latest estimate, is given in the table page 1042. European Russia extends from the N. slope of the Caucasus Mountains, lat. 40° 30', to Lapland, lat. 70° 18' N.; and, including the kingdom of Poland, from lon. 15° to the W. slope of the Ural Mountains, gov. Perm, lon. 60° 45' E. It is bounded E. by Siberia and the Caspian Sea, S. by Asiatic Russia, the Black Sea, and the Ottoman and Austrian empires, W. by Moldavia, Austria, Prussia, the Baltic, and Sweden, and N. by Norway and the Arctic Ocean. The surface of Russia may be considered as one vast plain, enclosed by the Ural Mountains on the E., the Caucasus on the S., and partly by the Carpathians on the W. It opens to the Casplan Sea on the S.E., and the level countries of N. Germany on the W.; throughout its vast extent it does not contain a single mountain; the highest point between the Baltic and the Black Sea, near Kremenets, is 1,328 feet above the sea. The Baltic provs. have a mean elevation of 1,000 feet above the Baltic. The centre of the country is occupied by a dome-shaped elevation traversed by the Valdai hills, the average height of which is 800 to 900 feet, and the summit 1,400 feet above the sea; these sink rapidly to the S.E., where they are lost in marshes. Russia is traversed by the largest rivers in Europe; these form the great N. and S. basins, the water-parting between which is marked, not by mountains, but by slightly undulating ground; the Baltic receives the Tornea, Kemí, Uies, Kuma, Neva, Narva, Duna, Niemen, and Vistula; the Arctic Ocean receives the Pasvig, Kola, Petchora; and, by the White Sea, the Vigo, Onega, Dwina, and Mezen; the Black Sea receives the Danube, Dniester, Dnieper, Don, and Kuban; the Caspian Sea the Oural, Volga, Kuma, and Terek. In the N. of Russia there are numerous and extensive lakes; the chief are Lake Ladoga, the largest in Europe; Lake Onega, in the gov. Olonetz; Lakes Saima, Pajama, and Kolys in Finland; Pelpos between the gov. Revel, Riga, Pakov, and Petersburg; Imen in the gov. Novgorod, and Enara in Lapland. The smaller lakes, Biele in Novgorod, Koubinskoe or Koubensk in Volodia, are important for the internal navigation of the empire. The most valuable of the salt lakes is Elton in Saratov. Among the numerous islands belonging to the empire, the chief are the group of Novaya Zemlia (new land), in the Arctic Ocean, the archipelago of Spitzbergen, which is claimed by Russia, Kalguef, and Waigatz Islands. Geological phenomena, confirmed by history and tradition, warrant the conclusion that a great portion of Central Russia was under the sea at a comparatively recent period. The soil comprises every variety, much of which is unfit for cultivation. The vast region of the tundras, extending from lat. 64° N. to the N. coast, is a swamp in summer, and is covered with ice for nine months in the year; it produces only moss. S.W. of this the country, for a space of 150,000 sq. m., is covered with forests of pine, larch, and birch. The isthmus of Finland, between the White Sea and the Gulfs of Finland and Bothnia, a space occupying 800 m. in length, and 400 in breadth, is covered with lakes interspersed with rocks and sand hills; while in the S.E. an immense desert, called a steppe, extends between the Ural and the Volga, estimated to contain 330,000 sq. m.; a portion of it affords tolerable pastures. W. of lon. 46°, a series of salt lakes occupy a hollow space, which probably once formed a portion of the Caspian Sea. This steppe is exposed to the greatest extremes of climate; in winter the thermometer is generally 15°, and sometimes 35°, below zero, while in summer the heat is upwards of 100° Fahr. From its vast extent, Russia has a great diversity of climate; the plains of the N., exposed to the winds of the Arctic Ocean, are much colder than the other countries of Europe in corresponding latitudes. The whole of the N. coast, from lat. 60° on the White Sea, S.E. to lat. 63° N., lon. 38° E., has a temperature below the freezing point, and the surface is constantly frozen. Between this frozen space and lat. 68° N., the mean temperature varies from 33° to 40°; at St Petersburg, which is within this space, the thermometer in December and January sinks to 32° below zero, while in summer it rises to 85° or 90°. S. of lat. 58° the mean temperature is between 40° and 55°; the winters are short and severe, summers long and hot. In the interior S.E. and S. winds prevail, while W. and N.W. winds are most common on the coasts. Rain is most abundant in the Baltic provs. where the average annual fall is 15 to 20 inches. The amount and frequency decrease in proceeding from W. to E., and during the long summer of the S. provs., rain very seldom falls. Snow falls early in winter,—the average number of days in the year on which snow falls at St Petersburg, is 70.

Russia produces all the plants common to the other countries of Europe. Corn is raised more than necessary for consumption, and is exported, although agriculture is in its rudest state. Rye is the chief crop, and is very widely raised; the cultivation of barley extends to lat. 67°, and oats to lat. 68° N.; wheat is grown chiefly in the Ukraine. The countries of Central Russia, in the upper basin of the Volga, are the most fertile in the empire, and its middle portion, comprising the gov. of Nijni-Novgorod, Penza, Kasan, and Simbirsk, is called the granary of Russia. Hemp and flax are raised chiefly on the Upper Volga; tobacco is cultivated principally in the Ukraine; grapes are grown in the Crimea, and on the lower courses of the Don and Volga. The forests yield valuable produce, and building timber, tar, pitch, and potash, are widely exported. Black cattle and sheep are extensively reared; tallow and hides are exported in great quantities; sheep-skins form the dress of many of the peasantry, but the wool is of inferior quality. The horses of the S. and central provs. are large, in the N. they are small, those of the Cossack tribes are capable of enduring great fatigue. Camels are kept in large herds by the nomadic tribes in the steppes, and dromedaries in the Crimea. The bison is found near the sources of the Narew; the reindeer is confined to the region N. of lat. 66° N.; the elk, wild swine, deer, and hare, are found in the forests of the N.; and the fur-bearing animals are actively hunted. In addition to the birds common to other countries of Europe, the capercaillie is found in the N., and the pelican in the S., on the shores of the Black and Caspian Seas; geese and ducks abound in the lakes. Fish is plenty in the rivers, especially in the Volga and the Ural, and in the White Sea and the Sea of Azov. In the Arctic Ocean, on the shores of Novaya Zemlia, the whale and seal are fished. The E. part of Russia is rich in minerals; the two gov. of Orenburg and Perm, and especially the latter, have numerous mines of gold, platinum, and copper; silver does not occur in European Russia; iron abounds in the S. provs. In the mining districts of the Ural, the pop. is flourishing and industrious; the utmost activity is manifested, forests have been cleared, marshes drained, and the gorges of mountains have been filled with artificial lakes, water being the chief motive power. Salt is extensively made in the gov. Perm and Viatka, and in the W., south of Lake Imen. Lignite and brown coal occur in the Crimea, and on the W. of the Ural mountains; the coal field on the Donets is estimated at 100 m. long, and several feet deep. Coal beds of immense extent were discovered in the gov. Moscow in 1844. Since the time of Peter the Great, the progress of manufactures has been most rapid. In 1812, there were only 2,333 factories, and 119,093 workmen; in 1826, the number of factories were 5,244, and of workmen 245,414; and in 1839, there were 6,855 factories with 412,931 workmen; they are still rapidly increasing.

the commerce, and the improvements of their products have been commensurate with their progress. The staple manufactures are woolens, silks, linens, cottons, metal wares, soap and candles, besides which are manufactures of glass, paper, porcelain, arms, jewelry, and Morocco leather. Most of the articles used by the peasantry are made in the villages, one of which is usually devoted to a single branch of industry. In the kingdom of Poland, the chief manufactures are of woollens, linens, leather, and fur goods. The commerce of Russia is greatly facilitated by its numerous navigable rivers, and its vast and excellent system of canals, by means of which, not only do the Baltic and the White Sea communicate with the Caspian and the Black Sea, but the great lakes and the principal rivers are united into a complete system of inland navigation. The American Commercial Company, formed in 1707, has establishments in Russian America and at Moscow, Kazan, Tomsk, Irkutsk, and Kamtschatka. The railways completed in 1858 are 715 m. in length, the chief are from Warsaw, by Cracow, to Odesa, joining the Austrian & German lines at Kosel, and that from St Petersburg to Moscow. Moscow is the centre of internal commerce; and the chief seaports are St Petersburg, with Kronstadt & Riga on the Baltic, Archangel on the White Sea, Astrakhan on the Caspian Sea, and Odesa on the Black Sea. The principal exports are tallow, hides, hemp, lint, iron, copper, hulled, building timber, wax, potash, train oil, skins, furs, and Morocco leather. Imports, wine, cotton, silk, fine woollens, dyes, materials, tea, sugar, coffee, and other colonial produce, and machinery. In Russia, all power emanates from the emperor or czar, who is head of the church, and whose authority is absolute, all rank is based on the tenure of civil or military office. The nobility are a privileged class, they have great political power, and possess nearly all the land of the country. European Russia is divided into 49 govts. and 12 provs., besides the country of the Don Cossacks a kind of military republic, the grand duchy of Finland, the kingdom of Poland, and several countries in the Caucasus, Siberia, etc., some of which are actually, and others only nominally, dependent on Russia. In 1861, the educational establishments comprised 6 universities, and 3 lycées, with a total of 3,521 students, besides 2,149 secondary establishments, with 116,936 pupils, they are dependent on the government, and are placed under a minister of public instruction. In Poland there were, in the same year, 1,661 institutions, with 82,942 pupils. The military schools are under the superintendence of the emperor, and number 27 schools, with 9,504 pupils. The army of Russia is maintained at comparatively little expense; the number of effective troops was estimated, in 1862, at 1,473,242 men. In 1854 the navy comprised 4 ships of 120 guns, 6 of 100 to 110 guns, 26 of from 80 to 90 guns; 18 de from 70 to 80 guns; and 4 frigates of 60 guns; besides a large number of steamers and gun-boats, estimated by the Russians at from 400 to 500 vessels. The crews are estimated at 50,000 men, 20,000 of whom belong to the Baltic, and 19,000 to the Black Sea fleet. Several of the ships of the Black Sea fleet were sunk by the Russians in 1854, at the entrance of Sevastopol, for the purpose of keeping out the Anglo-French fleet. In 1862, the revenues of the country, exclusive of Poland and Finland, was estimated at 254,200,000 paper rubles (25 rubles equal to 1*l.*), and in 1860, the debt was estimated at 226,676,838 rubles, but these calculations are very uncertain. Public debt in 1863, 401,800,000 silver rubles.—Great Russia is the N. and middle portion of the empire in Europe, formerly called Moscovy—White Russia, a portion of Lithuania.—Black Russia, the W. part of do.—New Russia, a region in the S, comprising the territories of the Cossacks.—Little Russia, in the E W.—Red Russia, which till 1386, was an independent dukedom, now forms a part of Austrian & Russian Poland (Galicia & Poland). Pop. of European Russia (1861) 60,152,000. The govts. of the empire are as follows:—

SALT LAKE (CITY OF THE GREAT), a city of the United States, North America, is situated in the territory of Utah, lat. $40^{\circ} 48' N.$, lon. $113^{\circ} 8' W.$ Pop. 8,000. The city is 4 m. in length by 3 m. in breadth, the streets are at right angles with each other, upwards of 150 feet wide, and through the city flows a stream of clear water. Here is a mint, court-house, and a temporary place of worship, used until the grand temple, which is designed, be erected. This settlement was formed in 1847 by the "Mormons" or "Latter Day Saints," after their expulsion from the city of Nauvoo, in Illinois. Their prophet, Joseph Smith, and his brother, were murdered in the jail of Carthage by an armed mob. In the beginning of 1846, the van of the Mormons crossed the Mississippi on their journey for the western wilderness, under the guidance of Brigham Young, the successor of Joseph Smith, and after enduring great privations on their journey, in 1847 the pioneers reached the spot where they established the city, and in autumn were joined by the main body. During the winter and spring they suffered from famine, but on the arrival of harvest provisions became abundant. Large flocks of sheep and herds of cattle are reared, and, with the view of being a self-sustaining colony, beet-root is raised for the manufacture of sugar, a woollen factory has been built, besides grist-mills, cutlery and pottery manufactories. Owing to the scarcity of rain, great attention is paid to artificial irrigation, by means of reservoirs of snow, which accumulates in the gorges of the mountains, and yields never failing streams during summer. The soil is remarkably rich. The "Mormons" are zealously engaged in the task of spreading their dogmas, by a numerous staff of missionaries in all quarters of the globe, having this city as their head-quarters, and a large emigration fund has been established. As circumstances require, new cities are founded in the wilderness, to meet the wants of immigrating converts. Cedar City, 250 m. S. of the Great Salt Lake City, has been laid out in a spot having the advantage of water, good soil, wood, iron-ore, alum, and the appearance of a plentiful supply of coal. It is the design of the "Mormons" to found stations where the country will support a numerous population, to establish a line of communication with the Pacific, so as to assist their brethren on their pilgrimage to the head-quarters of the church. The "Mormons" have heavily taxed themselves for the purposes of their sect. Already have schools been built in most of the districts both in the city and country, which are well attended by old and young, with a normal school for the instruction of teachers, besides liberal assignments in money and land for the support of a university, the site of which has been laid out and enclosed, on a terrace of the mountain overlooking the city. Captain Howard Stansbury, chief of the U. S. survey corps, who resided amongst them upwards of twelve months, describes them as being "industrious, hospitable, and patriotic," in proof of which they gave, on demand, 500 men to the United States army on the occasion of the Mexican war, although they were just setting out on their pilgrimage for the wilderness. "All civil and ecclesiastical power is vested in the priests, and justice is promptly and wisely decreed; a plurality of wives is allowed." A convention of the citizens of that part of Upper California lying east of the Sierra Nevada mountains, was held at the Great Salt Lake City on 5th March 1849, and next day they adopted a constitution, to remain in force until the United States Government should otherwise provide for the government of the territory, and sent a delegate to Congress. The government has since ratified the constitution, and appointed President Young governor of the new territory.

Coast line, including the Bay, about 200 miles. The coast region chiefly consists of a belt of rich alluvial land, varying in width from 10 to 20 miles; behind this is a broad plateau with an average elevation of 2,000 feet, and relieved by numerous volcanic peaks; between this and the Cordilleras, which form its N. boundary, and which attain an elevation of from 6,000 to 8,000 feet, lies a broad fertile valley watered by the river Lempa. About midway between the valley of the Lempa and the Bay of Fonseca, is the basin of the Rio San Miguel, its other principal stream. The Bay of Jiquilisco, the port of which is now called Puerto del Triunfo, and the port of La Concordia, have all the necessary capacity for commercial purposes. Other principal ports are La Unión in the Bay of Fonseca, the proposed terminus of the Honduras Railway. [LIBERTAD and ACAYUTLA]. This state has relatively the largest population, most industry, and greatest commerce of all the Central American republics. Chief products indigo, sugar, maize, cotton, tobacco, and coffee. In the Cordilleras, along its N. frontier, are the celebrated silver mines of Tobasco and Sociedad, and the gold mines of Capatillas. There are rich iron mines, and vast beds of brown coal exist along the valley of the Rio Lempa. Total revenue in 1853-4, 600,000 dollars, expenditure 579,406 dollars. The public debt on 1st Jan. 1855 was 657,000 dollars, of which only one-half was foreign. The exports in 1851 were valued at 1,200,000 dollars, consisting chiefly of indigo, ore, balsam, skins, rice, and sugar. Imports same year, 1,500,000 dollars. SANDWICH ISLANDS, on the Hawaii Archipelago, a group, N. Pacific Ocean, mostly between lat. 18° 50' and 22° 20' N., lon. 155° and 160° W. Principal islands, Hawaii or Owyhee, Mowee, Woahoo, Kauai, Molokoi, and some of less size. Aggregate area estimated at 6,090 sq. m., and pop. of group variously estimated from 100,000 to 185,000. Surface rises to a great elevation, and in Hawaii are several active volcanoes. Climate salubrious; mean temperature 75°, range of thermometer 60° to 88° Fahr., with sea breezes and moderate rains. Soil in the uplands better adapted for grazing than agriculture; fine wheat is, however, raised there, and the valleys produce coffee, sugar, cotton, tobacco, cocoa, arrow root, the mulberry, yams, sweet potatoes, and taro. Sandal wood was formerly an important product, but the forests have been too rapidly thinned, and little is now produced. Poultry and swine are very numerous. Honolulu, the cap., on the island Woahoo, is an important entrepôt for trade between all commercial nations. On Cook's discovery of the group, each island had a separate ruler; but afterward the whole of the islands were consolidated under one government by Tamehama. His son, who succeeded him in 1812, at once abolished idolatry. Missionary stations were established in 1820, and the natives are now converted to Christianity. In 1846 there were 24 American missionaries, 357 schools, and 18,000 pupils, with several printing presses and newspapers. The islands are frequented by whaling vessels, and are in the great line of commerce between California, China, and Australasia.

SARDANA, a vill. of the island Sardinia, div. Cagliari, 23 m. S.E. Oristano. Pop. 1,710.

SARDINIA, an island of the Mediterranean, S. of Corsica, from which it is separated by the Strait of Bonifacio, 115 m. S.W. the nearest point of the Italian peninsula, between lat. 38° 51' 50" and 41° 15' 42" N., lon. 8° 3' 26" and 9° 50' 30" E., length 42 m., breadth 21 m. Area, including the island of Caprasa 9,187 sq. m. Pop. 547,112. Cap. Cagliari. Surface generally mountainous. Mount Genargentu, near its centre, is 7,000 feet above the sea. On the W. are extensive plains, that of Biddone, is 3,000 feet above the sea. The Turo, the largest river in the island, rises in this plain and flows W. to the Mediterranean, the other rivers, the Coginas, Flumendosa, and Mannu, are small; the finest and most fertile valley is that of Campidano, between the Gulfs of Cagliari and Oristano, there are no lakes in Sardinia, but numerous ponds and marshes. Coast much indented and forms excellent harbours; that of Cagliari is one of the best in the Mediterranean. The principal gulfs are Cagliari in the S., Oristano in the E., and Oristano in the W. There are numerous small islands near its shores, the chief are Asinara off the N.W., S. Pietro and S. Antuoco off S.W., Maddalena, Caprera, and Tavolara off the N.E. points. Climate very variable; snow lies on the highest mountains for 6 or 7 months in the year; long droughts frequently occur in summer, when many districts are rendered extremely unhealthy on account of malaria. Prevailing winds the mineo (N.W.) stormy, and the Levante (E.) hot and dry. Rain falls mostly from October to December during S.W. and N.W. winds. One-third of the superficies is occupied by barren and stony deserts; forests are extensive, and afford excellent timber; wheat, barley, and pease, are exported, although agricultural operations are conducted in the rudest manner. There are no good roads. The cultivation of the vine is increasing in importance; olive oil is of inferior quality; tobacco and silk are a royal monopoly; silk is produced in small quantity. Domestic animals are small and of inferior breeds. Cheese from the milk of sheep and goats is extensively made, and forms a valuable export. Deer, wild boar, and foxes abound, and the skins of hares, rabbits, martens, and foxes, are exported. Tunny and coral fisheries are important, but conducted chiefly by foreigners. The island affords gold, silver, lead, and other minerals, but they are rendered useless for want of means of conveyance. Manufacture, are unimportant. Since 1858, the island has been divided into 3 administrative portions, Cagliari and Nuoro in the S., and Sassari in the N. These are subdivided into 11 provs., named from their chief towns—Cagliari, Bussachi, Iglesias, Isili, Lannus, Nuoro, Sassari, Alghero, Cagliari, Oristano, and Gallura (chief town Tempio). The island which forms a political and administrative division of the kingdom of Sardinia, and has itself the title of kingdom, is governed by a viceroy, resident at Cagliari, who is lieutenant and captain-general. Religion exclusively Roman Catholic. There are two universities, one at Cagliari, and another at Sassari. There is a primary school in each village, yet in a population of upwards of half a million, not more than 9,000 children are at school. Sardinia was colonised by the Carthaginians, from whom it was taken by the Romans in the third Punic war. On the fall of the Western Empire, it came successively under the power of the Vandals, Goths, and Moors. At the end of the 12th century, it was held by the Genoese, and afterwards by the kings of Aragon till 1718. In 1720 it was acquired by Savoy in exchange for Sicily. It was the only portion of the Sardinian dominions which was left in the power of the sovereign during the usurpation of the French from 1798 to 1814.

SARDINIA (Kingdom of), or THE SARDINIAN DOMINIONS, a state of South Europe, in the N.W. of Italy, consisting of two parts.—I the Continental States. Pop. (1857) 4,890,260, and II. the Island of Sardinia. Pop. (1857) 877,283, from which it derives its name. The continental portion between lat. 45° 39' and 46° 24' N., lon. 5° 38' and 10° 7' E., is bounded N. and E. by Switzerland, Austrian-Italy, Parma, and Modena, S. by the Mediterranean, and W. by France, comprising the principality of Piedmont, the dukedom of Savoy, the county of Nice, and the free town of Genoa. The kingdom has 4 universities, 61 gymnasia, 64 middle schools, 80 seminaries, communal, marine, and military academies, but education is very little diffused. Manufactures, silk and glass, cotton and sugar refining in Turin, and coral ornaments in Genoa, cap. Turin. Area and pop. as follows.—

Provinces.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. (1857).	Chief Cities.
Savoy, Piedmont, Nice and Genoa, Sardinia (Island),	4,890 11,200 7,700 6,500	877,283 4,890,260 700,000 147,115	Courmayeur Turin, Genoa, Cagliari.
Total,	20,290	4,890,260	..

Surface mountainous, covered W. and N. by the Alps; the culminating points of which are Mont Blanc, Monte Rosa, and Mont Corvin. It is watered by the Rhone, Var, and Maira, which flow to the Mediterranean, and by the Po and its affluents the Tanaro, Stura, Dora, Sesia, and Tessoro. Climate cold in the mountainous districts, but warm in the valleys, many of which are rendered unhealthy from rice fields. Principal crops, rice, maize, wheat, chestnuts, vines, olives, figs, oranges, and citrons. Mules are extensively reared. The silk of Piedmont is considered the best in Italy. Chief exports cattle, iron, silk fabrics, olive oil, and wax. The Kingdom of Sardinia, the origin of which was the duchy of Savoy, was successively enlarged by the annexation of Piedmont, the eo. of Nice and the island Sardinia; its present limits date from the commencement of the 18th century. From 1798 to 1814, its continental portion formed part of the French empire. In 1815, it was augmented by the addition of Genoa and the island of Capraja. It has been divided into 14 administrative divisions. In 1858, 390 m. of railway were opened. Army 47,915 men. Navy, 29 ships, 436 guns. In 1858, Sardinia, in alliance with the British and French, took the field against Russia. In April 1859 the Austrians invaded the Sardinian territories by crossing the Ticino; and in May, a large French force under Napoleon III. took the field to assist in their expulsion. SAXONY (Germ. Sachsen), an old division of North Germany, which extended between the Baltic and the North Sea in the N., and Bohemia and Bavaria in the S. In the former partition of Germany, the circle of Upper Saxony composed the greater part of the present kingdoms of Prussia and Saxony, and that of Lower Saxony, Hanover, Brunswick, Mecklenburg, and Holstein.

SAXONY (Germ. Sachsen), a kingdom of Central Europe, in the middle of Germany, between lat. 50° 10' and 51° 28' N., lon. 11° 55' and 15° 3' E., bounded E. and S. by Austria, W. and N. by Bavaria, Saxe-Weimar, Saxe-Altenburg and Prussia; cap. Dresden. Length 183 m., breadth 56 m. P. (1855) 2,039,075, divided as follows in 1852:—

Cities.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. (1852)
Dresden,	1,674	207,708
Leipzig,	1,328	448,856
Zwickau,	1,700	235,527
Bautzen,	1,711	297,744
Total,	6,777	1,087,535

Surface partly mountainous; traversed on S and S.E. frontier by the Erzgebirge and Riesengebirge mountains, which rise to 4,000 feet in height; the mean elevation of the country is about 1,100 feet. The climate of Saxony, in the plains, is mild and salubrious, but a portion of the mountain district of the Erzgebirge is termed "Saxon Siberia," from the severity of the winter climate. Mean temperature of year at Dresden 49°·1, winter 33°·7, summer 66°; at Altenburg the mean temperature is only 47°·6, Fahr. Soil fertile in grain, and cultivated with great care; the chief crop is rye; wheat and barley are grown in the valleys, oats and potatoes in the higher districts. Fruit is extensively cultivated, and good wine is produced from the vineyards of the Elbe. The forests, which cover 1-4th of the surface, furnish excellent timber. The breed of merino sheep is celebrated, and yields valuable wool, much of which is exported to England. Cattle are of a superior description; horses are not extensively reared. The country is watered by the Elbe and its affluents, the Black Elster, the Mulde, and the Saale. Saxony is rich in mines of iron, lead, copper, silver, cobalt, blende, antimony and coal. Mining employs a great proportion of the pop. Upwards of 500 mines are in active operation; the centre of the mining district is at Freiberg. Porcelain clay, marble, and building stones are abundant. The chief manufacture is that of cotton, in the spinning of which great improvements have been made, and there are many cotton printing works. The other chief branches of industry are linen and woollen weaving, stocking-making, and the fine porcelain of Meissen, called Dresden China.

Commerce, which is very extensive, especially in books and manufactured goods at Leipzig, is facilitated by the river Elbe, and by railways from Dresden to Leipzig, Halle, Berlin, &c. The religion of 97 per cent. of the pop. is Lutheranism. Public instruction is well developed, the proportion being 1 pupil for every 6 of the pop. (95 of every 100 children capable of instruction being in attendance at school), and the university of Leipzig is one of the principal in Germany. There are 9 normal colleges. The electorate of Saxony, created in 1422, was erected into a kingdom by Napoleon I. in 1806, who united to it the grand duchy of Warsaw, which, along with some portions of the Saxon territories, was detached from it in 1815. Previous to 1836, Saxony was divided into the 5 circles of Meissen, Leipzig, Erzgebirge, Voigtland, and Lusatia. The government is a hereditary limited monarchy; a representative system was organised in 1830. Public revenue (1851) 8,281,728 thalers; expenditure 8,281,728 thalers. Debt (1853) 42,781,323 thalers. Armed forces 25,390 men.

SAXON LAND, the south part of Transylvania watered by the Aluta river and its affluents. Area about 4,248 sq. m., and pop. (1850), 465,000. It is subdivided into 7 jurisdictions or stăbils, named from their caps. Hermannstadt, Klausenburg, Mediasch, Mühlenbach, Schenarstadt, Reusmarkt, and Brous or Szászvaros (whence Transylvania derives its German name of Siebenbürgen or the "Seven Towns") to which Kronstadt and Bistritz were afterwards added. The present inhabitants preserve almost unaltered their German language and hereditary usages, and are the most industrious race in Transylvania. Agriculture is carefully conducted. Manufactures of woollen, cotton, and other goods, are carried on in the towns, the principal of which are Hermannstadt and Kronstadt.

SCHWYZ, one of the four forest cantons of Switzerland, nearly in the centre of the Confederation, to which it gave name, enclosed by Lucerne, Zug, Zürich, St. Gall, Glarus, Uri, and the Lake of Lucerne, which last separates it from Unterwalden. Area 339 sq. m. Pop. (1880) 44,168, nearly all Roman Catholics. Surface mostly mountainous; the Roostock rises to 8,061, and the Righi to 8,905, feet above the sea. Principal rivers the Sihl and Muotta. The Lake of Zürich forms a part of its N., and that of Zug a portion of its W. boundaries. Wine and fruit are cultivated, but cattle rearing is the chief branch of industry, and cattle, cheese, and timber are the principal exports. Manufs. nearly confined to cotton twist and domestic fabrics. Government a pure democracy; and all the male inhabitants above 16 years of age assemble biennially at Schwyz to exercise legislative power. The executive duties are performed by a council of 90 members. Public education is very backward, and the canton has no public library. Principal towns, Schwyz, Art, Küssnacht, and Einsiedeln. Schwyz, with Uri and Unterwalden, formed, in 1307, the nucleus of the Swiss Confederation, in which Schwyz now holds the 4th place; it contributes to Confederate army 602 men.—Schwyz, a vill., cap. cant., is situated in the Muotta valley, at the base of the Mythen mountain, 17 m. SCYLLY ISLANDS, a group off the S.W. coast of England, included in the co. Cornwall, 30 m. W.S.W. the Land's-end. Lat. of lighthouse on St. Agnes 49° 53' N., lon. 6° 20' W. They consist of about 140 islets and rocks, the principal of the former being St. Mary, Tresoo, St. Martin, Brechar, St. Agnes, and Sampson. Aggregate area 5,779 ac. Pop. 2,627, employed in fishing, agriculture, and manufacturing kelp. Climate mild, and soil in many parts fertile, producing good barley, rye, oats, and potatoes. Trees are few. Horses and cattle small; sheep plentiful, as are wild fowl. Hugh-Town, the cap., on the island St. Mary, is the seat of a judicial court of 12 persons, who undertake the civil government of the islands, and it has a pier, fort, and custom-house. These islands communicate by packets with Penzance, between them and which part is a dangerous rocky ledge termed the Wolf. They have several secure roadsteads; but numerous shipwrecks have occurred on them, in one of which 3 line-of-battle ships, under Sir Cloudesley Shovel, were totally lost October 23, 1707. They have been considered the Coastlands or lin-

islands of the ancients, and there is a tradition that a tract of land connected them with Cornwall, but they have no mines of tin or any other metal.

Area 52,120 sq. m. Pop. 1,087,762.

It presents, in some respects, a remarkable similarity to Egypt, being a plain divided by a large river, and bounded on one side by mountains, and on the other by a desert; but though fertile on the river banks, it is far inferior in productiveness, population, and civilization, to the valley of the Nile. The delta is encumbered with jungle and tall grass; and the lands bordering it are poor, destitute of fresh water, and, after the inundation, incrustated with salt. Upper Soinde is the most fertile part of the country, being irrigated by canals, and yielding rice, wheat, barley, oil-seeds, millet, opium, indigo, maize, sugarcane, cotton, pulse, and esculent vegetables, with dates, mangoes, plantains, and the fruits common to Southern Europe. Much of the country has, however, been depopulated by the Amers, and laid waste for hunting grounds. Mimosa, banyans, palms, and mangroves, are amongst the principal trees. Camels, buffaloes, sheep, goats, horses, and asses, are the domestic animals; wool is an important product, and is manufactured into bags, ropes, and strong cloths. Climate extremely sultry and dry; at Hyderabad the thermometer has been found to stand in the shade at 98° 5 Fahr., during a part of the day, for six months of the year, and epidemic diseases are frequent and destructive. Tigers, hyenas, wolves, and other formidable animals are numerous, and affigators swarm in the pools of the delta. Coarse cloths, felt, mats, arms, leather, and horse furniture, earthenware, cotton, silk, and embroidered fabrics, are made in the towns, but few manufactured goods are fitted for exportation; the exports consisting chiefly of the natural produce, rice, and other grains, ghee, hides, fish, wool, salt, and nitre from the soil, oil and oil seeds, bark, alkalies, firewood, opium, tobacco, camels and horses. Imports are chiefly manufactured goods, madder and other dyes, groceries, metals, gems, timber, cordage, bamboo, and dried fruits. Kurrachee, at the mouth of the Indus, is the chief port and seat of foreign trade. The inhabitants are partly Hindoos, partly Beloochees, and Mohammedans, the lower classes of the latter being of the seonee, and the upper or amers of the shik sect. Until lately the country was governed by the amers, who exercised an aristocratic military despotism; but after open hostilities had been evinced by them against the British, their power was completely broken by the forces under Sir C. Napier in 1844, and Soinde became a British dependency. Chief towns, Hyderabad, the cap., Shikarpoor, Khyrpoor, Kurrachee, Tattah, Meerpoor, Hella, Larkhana, and Boore.

SOIO, CHIO or KURO, CHIO, an island belonging to Turkey, off the W. coast of Asia Minor, 4 m. W. Cape Bianco, from which it is separated by the Strait of Soio. Lat. of chief town on its E. coast 38° 33' N., lon. 28° 1' E. Length N. to S. 82 m., greatest breadth 15 m. Area 508 sq. m. Surface very much diversified; it is naturally one of the richest and most beautiful islands of the Levant. Principal products, wine of superior quality, mastic, silk, wool, cheese, figs, lemons, oranges, and other fruits; less corn has usually been raised than is required for home consumption. Previously to 1832, this island was the best governed and most prosperous in the Grecian archipelago, and had thriving silk manufs., and a considerable trade with Constantinople, Syria, and Egypt; but, in the above year, some of its inhabitants having joined the Samians in their revolt, nearly all the population, comprising from 120,000 to 150,000 persons, were massacred or sold into slavery by the Turks, and the buildings and plantations were for the most part destroyed. Principal town Kasro, on its E. coast. The tragic poet Ion, the historian Theopompus, the sophist Theocritus, and the philosopher Metrodorus, were natives of this island, which also claims, in opposition to Smyrna, to have been the birthplace of the Greek poet Homer.

SCOTBY, a township of England, co. Cumberland, on the Newcastle and Carlisle Railway, 8½ m. E. Carlisle. Pop. 478.—SCOTFORTH is a township, co., pa. and 1½ m. S. Lancaster. Pop. 698.

SCOTLAND, a pa. of England, co. and 54 m. N.E. Lincoln. Area 2,500 ac. Pop. 372.

SCOTLAND, the northern portion of Great Britain, extends in its mainland from lat. 54° 38' to 56° 41' N., lon. 1° 45' to 8° 14' W., and including its islands, to lat. 56° 50' N., lon. 8° 35' W. It is of an oblong irregular form, the mainland measuring from N. to S. about 276 m., and the breadth varies from 30, 50, 100, and 175 miles. It is bounded on the W. by the Atlantic Ocean, on the E. by the North Sea, and on the N. by the Pentland Firth, which unites the Atlantic and North Sea, and divides the Orkney and Shetland Islands from the mainland. On the S.E. it is separated from England by the river Tweed, direct S. by a waving line of the Cheviot hills, and S.W. by the Solway Frith. Estimated area, including islands, 28,896 sq. m., or 18,944,000 ac., of which 5,043,450 ac. are cultivated, 13,000,550 uncultivated, and 638 sq. m. occupied by lakes and rivers. Pop. (1801) 1,399,068, (1841) 2,620,184, (1851) 2,988,742. On the N. coast are the two large groups of the Orkney and Shetland Islands. On the W. the Hebrides or Western Isles, running N. to S. from $\frac{1}{2}$ a mile to 50 miles from the coast. This group comprises the Lewis and Harris, North and South Uist, Skye, Mull, Jura, Islay, etc. The coast line has an aggregate length of 2,506 m.; and on the W. arms of the sea penetrate inland, forming Loch Long, between Argyll and Dumbarton shires, Loch Fine and Loch Linnhe in Argyllshire, and Loch Eil in Inverness-shire. In Ross-shire Lochs Carron, Torridon, Gair, Ewe, Greinord, Broom, and Enard. In Sutherlandshire Lochs Assynt and Laxford. In addition to these there are innumerable inland fresh water lochs. On the E. the indentations are called friths, comprising the Forth, Tay, Moray, and Dornoch; and on the W. coast is the Frith of Clyde, which is of great commercial importance. The Atlantic and North Sea are connected by the Caledonian Canal: Loch Fine and the Atlantic by the Crinan Canal, and the rivers Forth and Clyde by the Forth and Clyde Canal. There are numerous headlands and promontories on the coast, the chief of which are St Abb's Head, Berwickshire; Fifeness, a low sandy headland, is the termination of the peninsula of Fife; Buddoness, in Forfarshire, with a lighthouse; Girdleness, with a lighthouse, at the mouth of the Dee, in Kincardineshire; Buchanness, with a lighthouse, in Aberdeenshire, and the most easterly land in Scotland, and Kinnaird Head, also with a lighthouse, at the entrance of Moray Frith; Tarbetness, with a lighthouse, on a peninsula between the Dornoch and Beaulie Friths, in Ross-shire; Clyth Ness, Noss Head, Holborn Head, Duncansby Head, & Dunnet Head, the latter with a lighthouse, in Caithness; Strathely Point, Whiten Head, Far-out Head, Assynt Point, & Cape Wrath, with a lighthouse, in Sutherlandshire; the Mull of Kintyre, with a lighthouse, at the entrance to the Clyde, besides Toward and Clough Points, with lighthouses, on the Clyde; Corsewall Point, with a lighthouse, at the N.W. extremity of the Rhins of Galloway; Mull Head and the Mull of Galloway, the last with a lighthouse, are in Wigtonshire, besides numerous other headlands. The chief rivers are the Tweed, Forth, Tay, North and South Eaks, Dee, Don, Spey, Deveron, Lossie, Findhorn, Ness, Conon, Eron, Wick, and Helmsdale, on the eastern side; the Nith, Annan, Dee, Cree, Ayr, Doone, and Clyde, on the S. and W. The principal harbours and piers on the E. coast are Berwick, Leith, Granton, Burntisland, Grangemouth, and the roadsteads of Incheith and St Margaret's Hope; on the N.E. Dundee and Aberdeen; and on the W. Greenock and Glasgow. Mountains are numerous: the Grampian range commences with Ben Nevis, in the S.W. corner of Inverness-shire, and extends in a N.E. direction, intersecting the country to near the E. shores of Aberdeenshire, with branches stretching S. to the Tay, and N. and N.W. to the shores of the Moray Frith. The Grampians, with their offshoots, form an extensive mountain chain, with elevations varying from 4,968 to 8,000 and 2,000 feet in elevation above the sea. The valley of the Caledonian Canal separates this region from the mountainous district of Sutherlandshire, which terminates at Cape Wrath. On the S., bordering on England, are the Cheviot hills, rising to 2,684 feet, in the S.E. the Lammermoors; in Dumfriesshire Queensberry hill, 2,140 feet, the Lowthers, 3,100 feet, Hartfell, 2,636 feet, and in Peeblesshire Dollar Law, 2,790 feet, above the sea. The geological formation of the country comprises granite, porphyry, primary schists, marble, and quartz rock, with occasionally metallic veins, while the old red sandstone formation fills up the valleys and the coast line on each side N. and S. of the Grampian mountains, extending, with the exception of the E. part of Aberdeenshire, along the whole coasts of Scotland, both E. and W. sides, from the Tay and Clyde N.wards. The middle portion of Scotland from St Andrews to St Abb's Head, and in corresponding lines westward to Dumbarton, comprehends the great coalfield of the country, intersected by the greenstone ranges of the Ochil hills on the N., and the Lanarkshire hills, Pentlands, and Fife Lomonds, in the centre. Another coal district extends also into Berwickshire and part of Roxburgh, while the whole region from the Lammermoor range S. and W. into Peebles, Dumfriesshire, and Wigtonshire, is composed of the lower Silurian or greywacke formation. Limestone and ironstone are found in the coal districts, lead ore in the Greywacke districts of Leadhills, silver in the Ochil hills, with lead, antimony, and manganese in the primary range of the Grampians. Traces of oolitic strata are found in the North and in the Western Islands. Temperature in the W. and S. parts mild, but humid: the central elevated regions chill and humid; the eastern plains and Lowlands more genial, though exposed in spring to chill easterly winds. In the Lowlands the summer is not so hot, but the winter is, on the whole, milder than that of England, and the climate is reckoned salubrious, and favourable to longevity. The following table exhibits the temperature of several localities:—

	Mean of winter	Mean of summer	Mean of year.	Range in inches.
Edinburgh,	Dec. 39.3	Dec. 57.3	Dec. 47.1	24.
St. Andrews,	39.3	55.9	46.5	27.5
Aberdeen,	39.0	57.1	46.8	27.0
Glasgow,	39.4	56.4	47.7	26.0
Inverness,	39.0	57.0	46.0	27.0
Glasgow,	39.6	56.1	46.8	26.5
Firth (London),	37.5	57.5	46.5	26.5

Mean annual temperature of mainland 47.9 Fahr. Prevailing winds W. and S.W.: in spring N. and N.E. Most rain falls on the W. coasts. The central, W., and N.W. districts are chiefly grazing and pastoral, the valleys and plains of the E. and S. districts agricultural. The alluvial, or carse lands of Stirling, Falkirk, and Gowrie, the plains of the Lothians and Clydes-

and Bonff. In the island of Barra fully one-half of the population is Roman Catholic. Episcopalianism are now most numerous in the districts where Episcopacy at one time predominated—Inverness-shire, and the neighbouring district of Strathairn, the south-east of Ross-shire, in Fort-William and Appin, and in the vicinity of Dunkeld. There has been no bishop of Caithness and Orkney since 1782. Irish immigration has greatly increased the number of Roman Catholics in the large towns. In 1851 the number of public day-schools was 3,342, with 281,045 scholars; private day-schools, 1,898, with 88,472 scholars. Of these there were supported by the Established Church 914 schools and 62,859 scholars; by the Reformed Presbyterian Church, 2 schools and 355 scholars; by the United Presbyterian Church, 61 schools and 5,807 scholars; by the Free Church, 719 schools and 68,041 scholars; by the Episcopal Church, 38 schools & 2,864 scholars; by Independents, 4 schools & 424 scholars; by Baptists, 1 school and 167 scholars; and by Roman Catholics, 32 schools and 5,673 scholars. As the educational census is confessedly made up of loose estimates and imperfect returns, its statements cannot be relied on; and it is evidently a great exaggeration to suppose that 1 in 7 of the population is in attendance at school. The Gaelic language still prevails in the Hebrides and in the west and inland parts of Argyll, Inverness, Ross, and Sutherland shires; but it is rapidly receding from the lowland borders. The old Scottish language is a cognate Teutonic dialect; it is now generally superseded by the modern English; though it will live in the works of Ramsay, Burns, and Scott. Scotland, previously an independent kingdom, was joined to England in 1603, on the accession of James VI., and a legislative union of the two kingdoms took place in 1707. By this treaty 16 peers, elected from the whole body of Scottish peers, represented the country in the House of Lords; and the counties returned 30 and the boroughs 15 members to the House of Commons. In 1832 the borough members were increased to 23. The elective franchise nearly corresponds to that of England. [BRITAIN.]

SCUTARI or ISKENDAR, Chrysopolis, a town of Asia Minor, on the Bosphorus, immediately opposite Constantinople, of which it is usually considered a suburb. Population estimated at 60,000. It is built on several hills, and has, both externally and internally, a great resemblance to the Turkish capital, and has numerous mosques and imarets or kitchens for the poor, a palace and gardens belonging to the Sultan, a college of howling dervishes, barracks, an extensive cemetery, public baths and bazaars, corn warehouses, and manufactures of silks and cotton fabrics. Its hospital was occupied by the Anglo-French army in 1854-5. It is the great rendezvous for caravans from Asia trading to Constantinople, and between it and Chalcedon; 14 m. Sward is the plain where the Turkish forces usually assemble for Asiatic campaigns. Here, in 325, the troops of Constantine the Great finally defeated those of Licinius.

The great harbour or inlet, on the S. side of which the town is situated, extends 4½ miles from W. to E. into the interior of the land, with an average breadth of half a mile, and is so enclosed by calcareous hills as to conceal the masts of the largest vessels. In ordinary times this is the station of the Russian Black Sea fleet, and the great school of marine exercise. At a right angle to the great harbour, the South Bay runs 1½ m. from N. to S., and to the W. of it, Artillery Bay runs about ½ mile in the same direction; between these bays the town rises in the form of an amphitheatre. The principal buildings, commencing at the shore, are, the house built for the reception of the Empress Catherine II. in 1787, and behind it the admiralty, arsenal, and offices of the marine. In the upper part are the houses of the inhabitants, markets, and a Greek church. The hospitals, barracks, and stores, are mostly on the E. side of South Bay, while the quarters of the artillery and the quarantine station are in Artillery Bay. By a special ukase, Russians alone are permitted to reside within its walls. Jews and Tartars are expressly excluded. The South Bay is used for arming and discharging vessels, and for mooring the hulks for prisoners employed in the arsenal. Beyond this on the E. is the Bay of Careenage, with accommodation for 3 ships of the line, and 2 frigates. The chief defences are, Fort Constantine, the Quarantine Fort, Fort Nicholas, and Fort Alexander. The 4 forts are built of limestone, faced with granite and porphyry, composed of 3 tiers of batteries, and having each 250 or 300 pieces of artillery. The harbour is infested with myriads of the worm teredo navalis, which attaching itself to the vessels, pierces their timbers, and renders them unfit for service in two or three years. In order to escape this destruction, the government resolved to fill the docks with fresh water, for which purpose vast canals, to convey the water of the Tchernai from the S. of Inkerman, were carried on and nearly completed, when it was discovered that the water of this muddy stream was the source of the scourge. The site of Sevastopol, previously occupied by the old vill. of Asthor, was chosen by the Empress Catherine II. in 1787. The harbour was long in a very inefficient state, till improved, since 1830, by an English engineer. The unfinished works have already cost upwards of 12,000,000 rubles. The Anglo-French army took up its position on the plateau between Sevastopol and Balaklava, and commenced the bombardment of the former on 17th October 1854.

SEVERN, one of the principal rivers of England and Wales, rises in Montgomeryshire, in a small lake on the E. side of Penllynion, 1,500 feet above the sea, flows at first generally N. E. until it enters England, and then successively S. E. and S. through Shropshire, Worcestershire, & Gloucestershire, and between Somersetshire and S. Wales, to its expansion into the Bristol Channel, 12 m. S. W. Bristol. Total length estimated at 210 m. Principal affs., the Teme, Uppar and Lower Avon, Leyden, Chik, and Frome from the E., and the Teme, Wye, Lsk., and Taff, from the W., many of which pour themselves into its estuary. From Newtown it has a total descent of 465 feet to the sea. It traverses a fertile country, and is navigable from the sea to Welshpool, a distance of nearly 180 m. Barges ascend it as high as Berdley, but its navigation is both tedious and difficult, to obviate which a canal 15½ m. in length, has been cut from Gloucester to the sea, and is navigable for vessels of 700 tons. From Welshpool to Newtown, its navigation is continued by the Montgomery Canal, and other canals connect it with the Thames, Trent, Mersey, and most other rivers of Central England. Four weirs or locks, between Stourport and Digby, near Worcester, have been constructed. The tide, here termed the ogre or hore, rushes into the Severn with such violence, that the stream sometimes rises suddenly 9 feet in height at Gloucester, and extensive embankments have accordingly been formed below that city, to obviate the effects of its irruption. The tide is perceptible in the Severn as far as Digby, below Worcester, 120 m. from its mouth. At its junction with the British Channel, the Severn is 10 miles across, and drains about 6,000 sq. miles. The vessels engaged in the Shropshire trade are from 30 to 40 tons burden, in the lower parts of the river they range from 100 to 140 tons, and by far the greater part of the commerce is carried on between Gloucester and the sea. Tolls received in 1847 by the Severn commission on account of improvements, 12,377.

SEVERN, two rivers of British America.—I. Upper Canada, dist. Home, discharges the surplus waters of Lake Simcoe N. W. ward into Georgian Bay and Lake Huron. Course about 20 m. It has several rapids and falls.—II. N. W. territory flows through Severn Lake, and enters Hudson Bay on its E. W. side, after a N. E. course of about 260 miles.

SEVERN, a river of the U. S., North America, Maryland, enters Chesapeake Bay near Annapolis, which city is on its S. bank.—The Severn is a name of the Danubius river, E. Austria.

SEVILLA or SEVILLA, Hispalis, a city of Spain, and its cap. during a part of the Gothic dynasty, its cap. prov., on l. b. of the Guadalquivir, here crossed by a bridge of boats communicating with its suburb Triana, 60 m. N. N. E. Cadix. Lat. (La Giralda) 37° 23' 44" N., lon. 6° 0' 59" W. Pop. (1857) 163,000. Is surrounded by Moorish walls about 6 m. in circuit, having gates and towers, and the ramparts forming public walks, its interior has almost wholly an oriental appearance. The cathedral, a structure of the 14th and 15th centuries, occupies the site of a mosque, and is 400 feet in length by 285 feet in breadth, and has a square tower 247 feet in height and surmounted by a colossal bronze statue of Faith. The interior is richly adorned, though many of its treasures were removed by the French and its numerous chapels, pictures by Murillo, and other great artists, organs, and the tomb in which the remains of Columbus (now in the cathedral of Havana, island of Cuba) were first deposited. Around this edifice are the archbishop's palace, the chapter house the alcázar, and the exchange, in which are the archives of Spanish America. The Alcázar a royal palace and gardens constructed in imitation of the Alhambra at Granada, contains the "court of Lions," hall of ambassadors, royal apartments, with many fine paintings and dwellings which are let out to private individuals or for lodging houses. Before the French revolutionary invasion, Sevilla is reported to have contained 140 parish churches, besides numerous convents, most of which are now converted to other purposes, and in 1845 it had only 31 churches. The royal tobacco and sugar factory employs 3,000 hands, chiefly females. Other principal buildings, are 29 monasteries, 86 convents, 11 hospitals, the city hall, barracks, prisons, theatres, the cannon foundry, arsenal, and in the centre of the city the bullring, capable of containing 14,000 spectators. The Torre d'Oro is an octagon tower, probably of Roman construction, a Roman aqueduct still conveys water to the city from Aqualuz, and here are other remains of classic antiquity. On one side is the Quemadero, or "burning place of the Inquisition," near which are a large cemetery, and an English burying-ground. The suburb Triana, beyond the river, is inhabited chiefly by gipsies and smugglers, and near it is a Moorish dam erected to prevent the effects of inundations, to which the lower parts of the city are liable. Sevilla is the residence of a captain-general, and the seat of a royal audencia, and of a university establishment in what was formerly a Jesuit college, and to which and the city museum are many paintings. It has a lyceum, and other public schools, and scientific associations. Manufactures of silks, wools, and linen cloths, hats, combs, soap, and earthenware, leather factories, government iron foundries, and silk factories, an active fishery in the river, a coating trade, and exports of oranges, olives, and off, extensively raised in the vicinity. The Guadalquivir is navigable up to the city for vessels of 100 tons burden; ships drawing more than 10 feet water load and unload 8 m. below the city. Chief imports are manufactured goods from England, hides, hemp, and flax from the Baltic, iron from Bilbao, and colonial produce from Cuba, etc. The Goths removed their capital from Sevilla to Toledo in the 6th century. The city was taken by the Moors in 711, and by Frederick II. in 1247, after which, until the time of Philip V., it was the chief residence of the Spanish monarchs. The French took it in 1810 and again in 1823. A few miles distant, on the W., in the village Santa Ponce, the ancient Italica, the birth-place of the emperors Trajan, Hadrian, and Theodosius the Great, and where are the remains of a Roman amphitheatre, and other vestiges of antiquity. Santa Ponce and Triana are the seats of large annual fairs.

SHETLAND or ZETLAND ISLANDS, an archipelago of about 30 islands, in the North Atlantic Ocean, belonging to Scotland, of which country, with the Orkneys, 50 m. S.S.W., it forms a co.; mostly between lat. $56^{\circ} 31' N.$ and $60^{\circ} 50' N.$, lon. $0^{\circ} 44' W.$ and $1^{\circ} 44' W.$, 180 m. S.E. the Faroe group, and 210 m. W. Bergen in Norway. Area 5,568 sq. m. Pop. 31,073. Mainland, in the S.W. comprises about half the area, and more than half the entire pop., together with Lerwick and Scalloway, the only towns in the group. Other islands are Yell, Unst, Fetlar, Whalsay, Bressay, East and West Barra, Papa-Strour, Foula, the most N. (and conjectured to be the Ultima Thule of the ancients), and Fair Isle, intermediate between Shetland and Orkney. Shores rocky, and greatly indented with inlets, especially in Mainland. Climate very damp and variable, but snow or frost seldom lasts long in winter, at which season the aurora borealis is highly brilliant; night is scarcely known during May, June, and July. Gneiss, mica-schist, hornblende, and other slate, serpentine, and primitive limestone, are the principal rocks. Surface generally mountainous, covered with heath, destitute of trees; and the valleys in Mainland, which all extend N. and S., are interspersed with many small lakes. Soil mostly light gravelly, and less productive than that of Orkney. Unst is the most fertile island. Agriculture is in a backward condition; the surface is chiefly appropriated to rearing live stock, though some potatoes, turnips, and oats are raised. The cattle and horses are of small breeds, almost peculiar to Shetland; and many of the latter especially, being hardy and well-shaped little animals, have been of late years imported into England, to the northern counties. The sheep and swine are also good. The cod, ling, and tusk, fishries are highly important, employing a great proportion of the inhabitants. Some copper, iron, and clay are met with; but few mines or quarries are wrought. Chromate of iron or chrome yellow is, however, an important article of export, from Unst. Mammals are almost wholly domestic, chiefly Shetland hosiery and shawls, woven by hand from fine wool; other exports are cattle, fish, etc., sent S. in return for colonial and manufactured goods. Bearmeat, oatmeal, fish, and potatoes, constitute most part of the food of the people, who appear to be, as to their condition and education, in superior circumstances to the population of the N. portion of the mainland of Scotland. They are chiefly of Norwegian descent, and their ancestors are said not to have embraced Christianity until the 13th century. The islands form a synod of the Scotch church, and, together with Orkney, they send 1 member to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1848) 174. Scandinavian antiquities are numerous in the islands, and on Fetlar are the vestiges of a Roman camp. [NEW SOUTH SHETLAND.]

SHUMLA (Marcianopolis), a fortified city of European Turkey, Bulgaria, pass, and 56 miles S.E.W. Silistria. Pop. 25,000 (13,000 Turks and 12,000 Bulgarians). It stands in a gorge, on the N. declivity of the Balkan range; and being on the great route from Wallachia to Constantinople, it is one of the keys of the Turkish capital. On three sides it is enclosed by mountains, and it is encircled by ramparts and a double fosse, strengthened by a citadel, and strong redoubts on an adjacent height. It is intersected by a rivulet, and divided into an upper and a lower town, the former chiefly inhabited by Turks, and containing numerous mosques and some barracks. It is the residence of a pasha and a Greek archbishop, and has flourishing manufactures of tin and copper wares, ready-made clothes, which are sent to Constantinople, silk goods, and leather. The Russians attempted, unsuccessfully, to take it in 1774, 1810, and 1838.

stan, bounds the plain of Jellalabad on the N., lat. 34° 25' N., lon. 70° E.

SIAM, a state of the island Sumatra, Indian Ocean, extending along its N.E. coast opposite Malacca and Singapore, and with a town of same name on the River Siak, 45 m. from its mouth, in lat. 0° 25' N., lon. 101° 55' E. Surface flat. Exports gold, camphor, gambier, rattans, tobacco, wax, sago, ivory, and silk stuffs; imports opium, salt, woollens, and Madras piece-goods.—The Siak River flows N.E., and enters the Strait of Malacca behind some islands nearly opposite the British settlement of Malacca.

SIAM, an independent country of S.E. Asia, of which it occupies the centre and S. parts, extending between lat. 4° and 21° N., lon. 96° 20' & 102° 20' E., nearly enclosing the Gulf of Siam on the S., and having W. the Bay of Bengal and British Tenasserim provinces, E. Laos, Cambodia, and the Gulf of Siam, and N. Laos. Length, N. to S. about 1,200 m.; breadth 350 m., cap. Bangkok. Pop. estimated (in 1854) at 6,000,000, comprising 1,900,000 Siamese, 1,500,000 Chinese, 1,000,000 Malays, and 1,000,000 Laos. The Menam River traverses its centre from N. to S., and by annual inundations, renders the great plain extremely fertile, the other principal river is the Mekong, and numerous tributaries. On the W. and E. Siam proper is separated respectively from the Tenasserim coast, by lofty mountain chains. The kingdom comprises the W. half of Cambodia, the Isthmus connecting the Malay peninsula with the Asiatic continent, and the N. and middle portion of the peninsula, the states of which are tributary to Siam. Climate salubrious in the plains, but subject to fatal fevers in the mountainous districts. Mean temperature of the year at Bangkok 83° Fahr. The S.W. monsoon brings abundant rain, the N.E. is dry and healthy. Chief products, comprise rice, sugar, pepper, tobacco, coconuts, sago, tropical fruits, teak, sandal sapan, rose and other woods, coffee, cotton, rattans, and gums, copper raised by Chinese miners is the chief mineral produced, lead, antimony, and zinc, iron and gems, are also found. The elephant, rhinoceros, tiger, buffalo, leopard, antelope, and bear, abound, serpents and crocodiles are numerous. The Siamese or Thai are of the Mongolian family, are of a mild and humane disposition, and remarkable for cleanliness and order. Buddhism is the state religion. The French Jesuits founded missions in 1858, and have a seminary and other schools in the capital, where American Protestant missionaries print and circulate the Bible in the Siamese and Chinese languages. They have made little progress in useful or ornamental arts, and most of the manufactures and handicrafts in the towns are carried on by Chinese or Annamese settlers. There are few roads in the country; but a navigable canal connects the Menam and Menam-kong rivers. Trade with China, Java, and Singapore, is considerable. Government an absolute monarchy, but the late king who died, 1851, was an enlightened monarch, who trained his troops in the European manner, made canals and roads, built ships, introduced steamers, encouraged arts and commerce, and established printing from types, which was unknown till 1835. The kingdom is divided into 41 provinces, bearing the names of their chief towns. There is no standing army but every male subject is liable to serve five portions of the year. A numerous force of war-junks and galleys is kept up, and manned by Chinese and other foreigners. The first connection between this state and the British Govern-along took place in 1835, when the Siamese envoys to Louis XIV. of France, visited London and concluded a treaty with Charles II. but little intercourse took place till 1831, when a new treaty was attempted. This was interrupted by the Burmese war in 1824, but concluded in 1826, since which time amicable relations have been maintained.—The Gulf of Siam between lat. 7° and 14° N., lon. 98° and 106° E., is wholly surrounded by Siam, except on the S., where it opens into the China Sea. Length 500 m.; breadth at entrance 300 m. It receives the Menam and several other rivers, and being exempt from hurricanes, shipwrecks are very rare.

SIAMO or SIAO, an island of the Asiatic Archipelago, between N.E. extremity of Celebes and Saurhir. Circumference about 35 m. Surface elevated, and it contains a volcano.

SIBERIA, SIARJA or ASIATIK RUS-SIA, comprises all the N. part of Asia, extending from the Ural mountains to the Pacific Ocean and Behring Straits, and having S. the Chinese empire and independent Turkistan, and N. the Arctic Ocean, in which it comprises the islands of New Siberia. Area estimated at 6,303,250 sq. m., and pop at 2,937,000. The cold of winter is extreme, while the summer heat is excessive, mean temperature of Jan. at Yakutsk, 45° F.; do. of July 68° F. Fahr. Surface in the S. elevated by the Altai chain, covered with forests, and interspersed with many fertile valleys; but by far the greater portion of Siberia is flat and sterile. In the W. are extensive steppes, inhabited by Cossack tribes, or roving Kirghiz, and all the N. half is a vast desert peopled by Ostiaks, Yakuts, Tchukchis, and other tribes in the lowest state of barbarism. The Obi, Yenisei, and Lena rivers, with their large and numerous tributaries, and the Oleneck, Indighirka, and Kolyma traverse the country in a N. direction, and enter the Arctic Ocean. Principal lakes are those of Baikal, Tchany, and Ozeny, with the Balkash-Nur or Lake Tenghis, which forms a part of its S. boundary. In the more depopulated districts, corn sufficient for the pop. is raised; it is chiefly barley, oats, and buck-wheat. Cattle are numerous in some parts, and in the N. rein-deer, foxes, martens, beavers, and bears, the skins of which compose important articles of trade. Siberia is, however, chiefly valuable to Russia, on account of its minerals. Total produce of gold from the Altai mountains; in 1837, 40,308 pounds = 17,689 lbs. troy, value 900,000*l*. In 1846, 1,586.55 pounds = 69,955 lbs. troy, value 3,416,437*l*. Total amount in ten years previous to 1844, 18,761,910*l*. The government has recently resumed the monopoly of the gold-washings. Antimony, cobalt, mercury, and zinc, are also met with; iron and copper are plentiful on the S. frontier in the gov. Tobolsk. Minerals are insignificant, except in some of the provincial caps. Irkutsk has an imperial factory of woollens for the clothing of the troops, and some manufactures of linens, glass, hats, soap, etc., and it is the great entrepôt of the commerce of N.E. Asia, receiving from Kuchta on the Chinese frontier, tea, rhubarb, fruit, paper, silks, and porcelain. Tobolsk has tanneries, and manufactures of soap and felt. W. Siberia consists of the govts. Tobolsk and Tomsk; E. Siberia of Yenisei and Irkutsk, the prov. Yakutsk; districts of Okhotsk and Kamtschatka, and the Tchukchei country. The govts. are organized and governed like those in European Russia; the army of Siberia consists of 40,000 men. The country is colonised not only by criminals, but also by vagabonds and serfs considered dangerous to their masters. These are collected at Moscow, from all parts of the empire, and sent off in weekly convoys, to the number of about 10,000 per annum; one-fifth of whom die in ten years, from fatigue of the journey and change of climate. Arrived in Siberia, they are divided into three classes.—1st, For forced labour in the mines; 2d, Public labour (to be afterwards established, provisionally, as colonists); 3d, Those destined for immediate colonization. These observe the rites of the Greek Church. Among the aboriginal population in the west of Siberia, from the northern Ural to the rivers Irtysh and Tobol, Shamanism, more or less mixed with impure Christianity, prevails. Between the Obi and the Yenisei, in the Government of Tobolsk, Shamanism prevails in the north, among the Samoeds, and the imperfect Christianity of the Greek Church in the south, among the Ostiaks. In the eastern portion of Siberia, from the Yenisei to Kamtschatka, and from the Arctic Ocean to the Chinese empire, Badkham, Paganism, and an imperfect Christianity prevail. The S.W. of Siberia, including the governments of Omsk, Tomsk, and part of Irkutsk, falls within the limits of the great Turkish branch of the human family, and the prevalent form of religion is Mohammedanism. Siberia has a few educational establishments, still in their infancy. In the four governments, Tobolsk, Tomsk, Yenisei, and Irkutsk, there are three gymnasia. In 1850, a ukase decided that in those of Tobolsk and Tomsk, the study of Greek should be replaced by that of the Tartar language, at the option of the student. The Old and New Testaments have been translated into the Mongolian language by the London Missionary Society. Chief cities, Tobolsk and Irkutsk respectively, the W. and E. caps., with Omsk, Tomsk, Krasnoyarsk, Yakutsk, Kishnia, Semipalatinsk, and Petropavlovsk. A line of fortified posts protects the country on the side of independent Turkistan. [NEW SIEMENIA—RUSSIA.]

SICILIES (KINGDOM OF THE TWO), a country
of S. Italy. Area 43,175 sq. m. Pop. (1851)
8,704,472. [NAPLES—SICILY.]

SICILE (KINGDOM OF), Trinacria Sicilia, the largest island in the Mediterranean, between lat.
36° 38' and 38° 18' N., lon. 12° 25' and 15° 49' E., separated on the N. E. from Naples by the Strait of Messina, 2 m. broad, and forming the Dominii al-di-la di Faro, or the territory "beyond the Strait" of the kingdom of the "Two Sicilies."
Shape triangular, length E. to W. 185 m., greatest breadth 120 m. Pop. (1856) 2,231,020. Its old divisions into Val Demone, Val di Noto, and Val di Mazzara, are now obsolete, and it is subdivided into the following provs. or intendencies.

The Neptunian or Madonian mtns., stretching from E. to W. through the N. part of the island, consist of granite, quartz, and mica, flanked, as in the Apennines, by limestone and other cal-careous formations; they rise to several thousand feet above the sea, and cover a great part of the surface with their ramifications. In some parts are mtns. isolated from the rest, the chief of which is Mount Ætna, near the E. coast, 10,874 feet above the sea. The principal plains border the sea, and are those of Catania and Syracuse in the E., that adjoining Trapani in the W., and those of Mi-lazzo, and Terranova. Rivers all small and un-navigable; the chief are the Giarretta, watering
the plain of Catania, the Sakso, Platani, Belici, flowing to the S. coast. The chief lakes are Biviere or Levini, near the E. coast, and the pool of Bana in the centre of the isl. Soil everywhere of high fertility, in some places it consists of a rich loam from 30 to 30 feet deep. Climate generally salubrious, except in some of the low lands. Mean temperature at Catania, year 67°.4, winter 53°.3, summer 84°.5; at Palermo, year 61°.1, winter 51°.5, summer 74°.4 Fahr. Summer heats are oppressive during the prevalence of the sirocco, snow is never seen, except on Ætna, and the highest points of the Madonias mountains; and the cold of winter is never so severe as to affect the verdure of the country;

hail-storms are frequent but rain is deficient.
The papyrus, sugar-cane, date palms, and other tropical products ripen at a height of 600 feet;
evergreens flourish at 2,000 feet, oak and chestnut woods cover the mountain sides to the height of 4,000 feet, wheat thrives at 4,500 feet, and beech woods prevail to 6,000 feet in elevation. Under the Romans, the island of Sicily was considered the granary of Italy, but owing to oppressive exactions and restrictions, there are few countries in which agriculture is so unscientifically conducted. The Indian fig, a species of cactus, grows wild in profusion. Lands chiefly belong to the nobility, the clergy, or the crown. Wheat and barley are exported in small quantities.

Other chief crops are beans, pulse, maize, rice,
olive oil, oranges, lemons, almonds, and other fruits, potatoes, tobacco, flax, hemp, sumach, liquorice, and manna. Silk is produced chiefly in the N. E. part of the island, and woven at Catania; in the W. 30,000 pipes of wine are annually made, of which from 18,000 to 20,000
are exported by English and other merchants at Marsala. Pastoral industry receives little attention, and except a few merino sheep, and good mules, all kinds of live stock are very inferior.
The sulphur beds of Sicily are of great value;
they extend over the centre and the S., in an area of 2,700 sq. m., in which about 150 mines are wrought, some at Riesi by an English company, with workmen from Great Britain. The sulphur is found in tertiary formations, and the increase in its production within a few years had been so rapid, that in seven months of 1838, nearly 77,800 tons were yielded, and this branch of industry employed 12,200 men and boys. In 1838, a monopoly in the export of sulphur was granted by the Neapolitan government to a French mercantile firm, which resulted in such a diminution in the general trade of Sicily, that after a vigorous remonstrance from the British Government, it was quashed in 1842, and trade is again on the increase. Alum, nitre, salt, bitumen, gypsum, and marble, are valuable mineral products; ores of copper, lead, iron and mercury are found in the mtns., but few mines
are wrought there, and nearly all metallic goods are imported. The tunny, sword-fish, and anchovy fisheries are important, and those of Palermo lately employed from 900 to 1,000 boats, and 3,500 fishermen. The coral fishery on the African coast is frequented by many fishermen
from Trapani, where the coral procured is polished. Silk manufs. at Catania, Palermo, and Messina, employ several hundred looms; and in the same cities hides and skins are dressed. At Trapani are some cotton factories wrought by steam; other manufs. are unimportant. Chief exports, sulphur, olive oil, oranges, and lemons, wine and spirits, sumach, silks, and corn, hard-wares, salted fish, linseed, manna, rags, and skins. Imports sugar and other colonial produce, cotton and other manufactured goods, hides, iron, deals, and wax. Messina, Palermo, Trapani,
and Catania, are the chief seats of commerce.

Each intendency is governed by a prefect, with a council and secretary. Each town has its judicial court; superior courts are held in Palermo.

Messina, old Catania; and a supreme court sits in Palermo, the cap. Except about 33,000 inhabitants of Greek descent, mostly near Palermo, and several thousand Jews, the inhabitants are all Roman Catholics. In 1839 there were 688 monasteries in the island. Education is chiefly in the hands of the clergy, and is said to be better conducted than in Naples. Palermo and Catania have universities; there are colleges and academies in 21 towns, and a primary and secondary school in each commune. In Catania there are schools of mutual instruction. This island was, in ancient times, the seat of many flourishing Greek colonies, of which Syracuse and Agrigento were the most famous. It fell successively under the Carthaginians, Romans, Goths, Greek emperors, Saracens, Normans, French, Spaniards, etc. It was annexed to Naples in 1736. In 1847, 1848, and 1849, unsuccessful attempts were made by the Sicilians to shake off the Neapolitan government. Messina was bombarded and taken by the Neapolitan troops 7th September 1848, and Catania 6th April 1849. [NAPLES.]

SKYE, the largest island of the Inner Hebrides, Scotland, co. Inverness, from the mainland of which co., it is separated by the narrow strait Loch Ash, whence it extends for 46 miles in a N.W. direction. Breadth very irregular, varying from 4½ m. to 33 m., it being indented N.W. and W. by Lochs Salort, Pollart, Bracondale, etc., and all round the other coast by smaller inlets. Estimated area (excluding the islands Scalpa, Rannay, etc., off its E. coast) about 547 sq. m., or 350,000 ac. Pop. 21,621. Surface mountainous; many heights in the centre rise to between 2,000 and 3,000 feet above the sea, amongst which the Cuchullin hills are conspicuous; its N. part and shores are bold and strikingly picturesque. It is composed chiefly of trap rocks, quartz, limestone, old red sandstone, and bas. There are some large basaltic pillars, and a curious spar cave. Rivulets and small lakes are numerous. Climate very moist and variable; rain falls three out of four days throughout the year, which renders the soil, otherwise good, moist and sterile, except in a few spots: most part of the island is useless for agriculture, and even the pastures are chiefly in heath and coarse grass; the majority of the inhabitants are consequently in a very impoverished state, and many have emigrated to the colonies. Arable lands are nearly confined to the sea coast; cattle, fish, and kelp, are the chief exports; and potatoes and fish the chief food of the pop. The inhabitants are mostly of Celtic descent. The island contains many Danish antiquities; it belongs chiefly to Lord Macdonald and the Macleod family; is divided into seven parishes; and forms, with adjacent Small Isles, a presbytery under the Scottish church establishment. SMYRNA, a famous city and seaport of Asia Minor, and the chief commercial emporium of W. Asia, Anatolia, on a plain at the head of the Gulf of Smyrna, and partly upon the declivity of the ancient Mons Paganus, which is crowned by a citadel. Lat. of Darughaz point 38° 26' 5" N., lon. 27° 9' 7" E. Estimated pop. 150,000, of whom 80,000 are Turks, 40,000 Greeks, 15,000 Jews, 10,000 Armenians, and 5,000 Franks. The houses are mostly of wood, and only one storey in height, streets narrow. The Frank and Greek quarters extend for about 2½ m. along the shore; above these is the Armenian quarter; and the Turks occupy the upper parts of the city, having between them & the Armenian two close quarters inhabited by the Jews. A railway (1856) is in progress to Aidin. Principal edifices, the visier-khass, constructed from the marble ruins of the ancient Iskara, the palace of the governor, barracks for 3,000 men, several Jews' synagogues, 6 Greek, 2 Roman Catholic, 2 Armenian, and 2 Protestant churches, and about 20 mosques, which are always open for the inspection of Christians and others. Numerous coffee-houses and gardens are scattered along the banks of the river Meles, which enters the gulf R. the city; and extensive cemeteries occupy portions of the declivity of Mount Pagan, on which are various remains of the ancient city, the seat of one of the "seven churches" of the early Christian period mentioned in Scripture. Smyrna has a large Armenian academy, and it is the residence of consuls of most of the principal European states. It has six journals, printed in five different languages. Trade chiefly with Great Britain, Austria, France, and the United States. Exports consist of silk, raw cotton, carpets, copper, opium, hides, madder, and wool, besides goats'-hair and skins, valones, olive oil, drugs, gums, sponge, figs, raisins, and nut-galls. Imports comprise coffee to about 6,000,000 lbs. annually, woollen, cotton, and silk fabrics, metals raw and manufactured, sugar, indigo, spirits, cochineal, and spices. Smyrna has claimed to be the birthplace of Homer. In 1402, it was ruined by Timour, and it has since suffered repeated vicissitudes, especially from destructive earthquakes and visitations of the plague, but its admirable situation for commerce has caused it, after each new calamity, rapidly to regain its wonted importance. It suffered severely from fire in July 1845.—The Gulf of Smyrna, an inlet of the Ægean Sea, extends inland for 45 m., the breadth of its entrance is 22 miles. It has in most parts good anchorage, and ships of large burden can anchor close to the quays of Smyrna near its E. extremity. It contains several islands, the principal of which, Long or English Island, is 5 miles in length.

BOUR (THE), a narrow strait between Denmark (island Seeland) and Sweden, which connects the Baltic with the Kattegat and North Sea. Length N. to S. 30 m., breadth at its narrowest point between Helsingfors (Elsinore) and Helsingborg 3 m., depth 4 to 20 fathoms. The Danish sovereigns formerly possessed the territory on both sides of the strait, and they have ever since continued to maintain the privilege of exacting toll from all foreign vessels passing through it at Elsinore. Average amount of tolls annually from 1821 to 1857, £13,641. In 1831, 19,919 ships passed the Sound.

BOUNDA or SECUNDA, a town of India, prov. Bundelcund, in lat. 26° 9' N., lon. 78° 68' E. It is situated on the r. b. of the Ghudh river. In Nov. 1817, the Marquis of Hastings fixed his headquarters here, on his advance towards Gwahior.

BOUNGANI, a river of East Asia. [SONGARI.]

BOUFLEY (St), a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Nord, arrond. Cambrai. Pop. 1,537.

BOUFRES, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. Seine-et-Marne, on the Loing, 15 m. S. Fontainebleau. Pop. 1,623, who manufacture tiles and other steel wares.

BOUR or TYRE, a seaport town of Syria, peah, and 28 m. N.N.E. Acce, on the E. part of a peninsula about 1 m. in length, which in antiquity was the insular site of the famous maritime city of Tyre. In 1837, it suffered from a severe earthquake, by which its walls and buildings were greatly dilapidated, and its pop. reduced to about 4,000, of whom one-half are Christians, and the other Turks. It appears to have no remarkable edifice; but on the peninsula are the ruins of a large Greek cathedral, and various traces of ancient structures, with some edifices, apparently connected with extensive water-works, and an aqueduct at Ras-el-Ain, on the mainland, about 2 m. distant. Its port, on the N. side of the artificial isthmus formed by Alexander the Great during his memorable siege of Tyre, is now so choaked, as to be unfit for any but small vessels; and the trade of this ancient emporium of the East has now dwindled to small exports of tobacco, cotton, charcoal, and steel.

BOURABAYA or SEURABAYA, a seaport town of the island Java, cap. one of the three provs. into which the island is divided by the Dutch, on its N. coast, opposite the island Madura, and at the mouth of the Kadiri, lat. of Salembas Fort 7° 13' 31" S., lon. 117° 44' 7" E. Pop. 130,000. It has a government house, a mint, and large storehouses. Its harbour is the best in Java, and defended by many forts and batteries; and here are ship-building docks, a naval arsenal, and a cannon foundry. It is the seat of a civil court, and court-martial, with appeal to the supreme court in Batavia. In its province are the ruins of Mojopahit, the former cap. of Java.

BOURACARTA, a town of Java. [SORAKARTA.]

BOURBOURG, a comm. and vill. of France, dep. B.-Rhne, 9 m. S.S.W. Wissembourg. Pop. 3,081.

BOURBIVAL LA-BARRE, a comm. and market town of France, dep. Manche, cap. cant., 5 m. N.E. Mortain. Pop. 4,328.

BOURNE, a market town of Portugal, prov. Estremadura, 13 m. N.N.W. Pombal. Pop. 1,520.

BOURTON, a pa. of England, co. Devon, 4½ m. S.W. Oakhampton. Area 6,680 ac. Pop. 615.

BOURTON, a comm. and mkt. town of France, dep. Landes, 14 m. W.N.W. Bay. Pop. 2,783.

BOURTRAINE (La), a comm. and town of France, dep. Creuse, 19 m. W.N.W. Guetret. Pop. 1,966.

BOURTON-ARKE, a pa. of England, co. Norfolk, 3½ m. N.N.W. Swaffham. Area 2,350 ac. Pop. 96.

SOUTHAL, a village of England, co. Middlesex, pa. Hayes, with a station on the Great Western Railway, 9 m. W.N.W. London.

SOUTHAM, a pa. and market town of England, co. and 9 m. E.S.E. Warwick. Area of pa. 2,370 ac. Pop. 1,711. It has a Gothic church, and is the head of a poor-law union.

SOUTH-AMBOY, a township of the U. S., North America, New Jersey, at the head of Baritan Bay, at the mouth of the Baritan, and on the Camden and Amboy Railway, 2 m. S. Perth-Amboy. Pop. 2,266. It has a manufactory of stoneware, and a good harbour, whence steamers ply regularly to New York.

SOUTHAMPTON (COUNTY OF) SOUTHAMPTONSHIRE, HAMPSHIRE or HANTS, a maritime co. of England, having S. the English Channel, with its inlet Spithead, the Solent, etc., E. Sussex and Surrey, N. Berkshire, and W. Wilts and Dorset. Area, including the Isle of Wight, 1,625 sq. m., or 1,040,000 ac. of which 900,000 are estimated to be under culture. Pop. 405,870. The ranges of the N. and S. downs traverse the co., being on the W. offsets from the table-land of Salisbury Plain, and on the E. continuous with the downs of Sussex and Surrey. In the S. are the extensive bays Southampton-water and the harbours of Portsmouth and Langston, with the islets of Portsea and Hayling. The S.W. division of the co. is mostly occupied by the New Forest. In other parts are the forests of Bêre, Ailes Holt, Woolmer, etc., and most parts of the co. are well wooded. A long and narrow strip is enclosed by the co. Sussex. In the N.N.E. and S.W. are extensive heathlands. Soil generally well cultivated. Principal rivers, the Anton, Itchen, Avon, and Stour. All the usual crops are raised; hops are cultivated on the E. border, near Fareham; large quantities of cider are made, and the bacon of the co. is in repute. Manuf., except those connected with the dockyard and shipping establishments at Portsmouth, are of little importance.

Some silks are made at Overton; paper, sacking, shalloon, bookbinding, druggists, knavery, and other woollen stuffs, chiefly in the N., and salt from pans at Lynton. Wimborne, on the border of Sussex, has some famous oyster beds.
The Basingstoke Canal is in the N.E., and the
co. is interested by the London and South-Western Railway, with several branches, and the South Coast Railway, terminating at Portsmouth.
Trade centres chiefly at Southampton and Portsmouth. The co. is subdivided into 39 hundreds, and is included in the circuit and diocese of Winchester, the ep.; besides which it contains the par. bor. Southampton, Portsmouth, Christchurch, Lynton, Petersfield, and the market
towns Gosport, Alresford, Alton, Basingstoke, Fordingbridge, Lynton, Christchurch, Romsey,
and Ringwood. The co. sends 4 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors in 1846, for N. division, 3,411; S. division 5,812; total, 9,223.
The ruined city of Silchester in the N., Portchester
with its ancient castle in the S., and Carisbrooke Castle, in the Isle of Wight, are amongst its principal antiquities, besides those in Winchester, the ancient cap. of the kingdom Wessex, and of England during the Saxon, Norman, and early Plantagenet dynasties.

SOUTHAMPTON, a parl. and munic. bor., seaport
town, and co. of England, in the S. part of the co.
Hants, occupying a peninsula between the mouths of the Test and Itchen rivers, at the head of Southampton-water, 12 m. S.S.W. Winchester, on the South-Western Railway, 72 m. S.W. London.
Lat. of St Michael's spire, 50° 54' N., lon.
1° 24' 2" W. Area of bor. and co. 1,970 ac. Pop.
35,305. Its main street, upwards of 1 mile in length, is separated into two parts by the Bargate,
a portion of the ancient walls, which still partially encloses the old town. Over the Bargate
is the town-hall; other principal structures are several parish churches, the audit and custom houses, theatre, public baths, two sets of assembly rooms, dock company's office, railway station, three piers, and the cavalry barracks.
The suburbs are extensive. The town is well supplied with water from a large Artesian well on Southampton common. Public institutions comprise the free grammar school, an hospital, numerous almshouses and other charities, a royal humane society, mechanics' literary and polytechnic institutions, an infirmary, botanic garden, and the surveying and engraving departments of the ordnance board. The new docks, on the E. of the town, opened in 1842, have an area of 208 acres, and admit steamers of above 700 tons burden. The West India, Mediterranean, East India, and China mails, have their station here, and the town communicates by steamers with all the ports of the south of England, the Channel islands, Ireland, and by railway with London, and all the centre of England.
The port extends from near Portsmouth to Christchurch. Registered shipping of port (1847) 4,966 tons. Here are some manufs. of silks and carpets, but ship-building and general commerce are the chief sources of wealth. Southampton is a place of fashionable resort in summer. The bor. is divided into 5 wards, and governed by a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors. It has annual races and regatta. The bor. sends 2 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1846) 2,208. Southampton appears to have risen on the decline of the ancient Caesarea, at Bittern, on the estuary of the Itchen; and in Saxon times it had a castle, of which, however,
little, if any portion, now remains.—Southampton

is a fine inlet, stretching from the Solent
and Spithead, N.W., into the interior of Hampshire for about 11 m.; greatest breadth about 2
m. It bounds the New Forest hundreds on the E., and receives the Anton, Itchen, and Hamble rivers. Its shores are picturesque, and it is usually covered with shipping.

SOUTHAMPTON, a co., U. S., North America, in S.E. part of Virginia. Area 614 sq. m. P. 13,531, of whom 5,765 were slaves.—Also several townships.

N.E. Chambersburgh. Pop. 1,795.—VII. co.
Bedford. Pop. 1,347.

SOUTHAMPTON ISLAND, British North America, on the N. side of Hudson Bay, is between
lat. 62° and 68° N., lon. 80° and 87° W. Coasts rugged and mountainous. Cape Southampton forms its S. extremity. It is conjectured to be a collection of islands, but its interior is unexplored.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA, a British colony, between lon. 132° and 141° E., and the Southern Ocean and lat. 26° S., comprising an area of 300,000 sq. m., or 192,000,000 ac. The coast line, which is more indented than in any other part of Australia, extends about 1,500 miles from N.W. to S.E., embracing Spencer and St Vincent Gulfs, with York Peninsula and Kangaroo Island. The surface of the colony is mostly undulating or level. The mountain ranges stretch generally from N. to S. The chief of these are the Gawler Range, extending from Streaky Bay to the head of Spencer Gulf, with a maximum elevation of 2,000 feet; Flinders's Range, running in a northerly direction from the head of Spencer Gulf; and the parallel ranges of Barnard and Gouger. Mount Bryant,
the most elevated summit E. of St Vincent Gulf, rises to the height of 3,012 feet. The table-land
in Eyre Peninsula, W. of Spencer Gulf, averages 1,300 feet in elevation. The Murray, which has its rise in the Australian Alps, pursues the lower part of its course in this colony, and is the only navigable river. Small streams are however, numerous, and the country is, on the whole, well watered. Principal lakes—Torrens, Alexandra, and Albert. Ponds and creeks are numerous, and a series of lagoons border the coast along Encounter Bay, in the S.E. The settled portions of the colony are situated on the E.
side of St Vincent Gulf, between that inlet and the Murray, and in the S.E. between Revolvi Bay, eastward, and the frontiers of Victoria. Climate healthy. The colony was established in 1836. Its progress has been remarkable. The population in 1847 was 31,158; 1857, 108,917. The sexes are nearly equal. Mortality, 1,304. The staple products of the colony are cereals, minerals, and wool. The quantity of enclosed land is 787,603 acres. The returns of stock in 1857 are as follow: Sheep, 1,637,005; lambs, 418,900; total,
2,075,905. Cattle, 310,400; horses, 26,226; goats,
1,647; pigs, 88,199. The quantity of land sold by the Government, from the commencement of the colony up to the end of 1857, was 1,567,740 acres. The lands are put up at auction, generally in 80 acre sections, at the upset price of 11 per acre. The local legislature is invested with control over the land fund. It is rich in mineral resources. In 1857, there were 56 mines worked in the colony, or ready for working. The quantity of ore mined during the year ending March 1862, was 10,961 tons. Coal is scarce. Iron abundant. The wool export for 1857 was 864,390. In 1857, imports 1,895,032; exports 1,744,190. In 1857, revenue 735,536; expenditure 684,868. The following are the principal lines of railway:—A line of about 7 m. connecting the city of Adelaide with Port Adelaide. 2. A line connecting Adelaide with Gawler-town, 26 m. long. The electric telegraph is in operation between Adelaide, the Port, the Goolwa, and Gawler-town; and the capital of South Australia. An important trade has sprung up on the river Murray, which is navigable from the Goolwa, near Encounter Bay, to Albury, a distance of nearly 2,000 m. The climate and soil of South Australia are admirably suited for the cultivation of the vine, of which 1,055 ac. were under cultivation in 1857. Excellent wines have been produced, and promise to become a source of great trade. The quantity of wine made in 1857 is computed at 99,378 galls.—value 25,000*l.*—of which 1,810 galls. were exported. Many fine fruits come to perfection; as also tobacco, hops, and indigo. Sarsaparilla, sassafras, and other drugs, are indigenous. Vegetables are plentiful. Gold has not been discovered in any great quantity in this colony. The Echunga diggings, on the Onkaparinga, have never employed more than 200 diggers, and lately they have been virtually abandoned. In 1857 manufactures and trade brisk. In the same year the income of the post-offices was 10,353*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, and the expenses 17,984*l.* 18*s.* The number of places of worship was 233, adapted to accommodate 44,898 persons. The colony, while increasing in population, wealth, and intelligence, is decreasing in crime. The government is vested in a governor; an executive council of the heads of departments, having ministerial responsibility; a legislative council, consisting of 18 members; and a house of assembly of 36 members. Both chambers are elective, but by different constituencies and with different terms. The constitution embraces triennial parliaments, universal suffrage, and vote by ballot. The chief settlements of the colony are Adelaide, Port Adelaide, Port Gawler, Albert-town, Gawler-town, Port Wakefield, Port Augusta, Goolwa, Port Elliott, Port Lincoln, Mount Barker, Strathalbyn, German-town, Macclisfield, Kapunda, and Kooringa.

Europe, occupying the greater part of the Iberian peninsula, extending between lat. 36° 1' and 43° 45' N., lon. 3° 20' E., and 9° 21' W., bounded N. by the Bay of Biscay and by the Pyrenees, which separate it from France E., and S. by the Mediterranean and the Strait of Gibraltar, and W. by Portugal & the Atlantic Ocean. P. (1857) 307,753. Cap. Madrid. The principal islands are the Balearic or Balearic Islands in the Mediterranean; off the coasts are the island of Leon, some islets in the Bay of Vigo, and others at the mouth of the Ebro. The surface of the peninsula is more diversified than that of any other country of equal extent in Europe; its interior forms a vast elevated table-land, which in the plateau of Castile has a mean elevation of 2,300 feet. This plateau occupies almost one-half of the superficies, and is nearly surrounded by mountains. The country is traversed in a direction from E. to W. by five principal chains of mountains, called in Spanish Sieras. These are (from N. to S.)

—I. the Pyrenees extending from Cape Creus on the E. to the Bay of Biscay on the W., culminating point Pic Nethou, 11,171 feet; and their W. continuation, the Asturian and Cantabrian mountains, some of which rise to 10,000 feet.—II. the chain which separates the basins of the Douro and Tagus, the Sieras Guadarrama, Gredos and Gata. Highest point in the Sierra Gredos 10,500 feet.—III. the mountains of Taledo, Sierra Guadalupe, and Sierra Mames, between the Tagus and Guadiana.—IV. the Sierra Morena, separating the basins of the Guadiana and Guadalquivir, and connected W.ward with the Serra Moniquis in Portugal.—V. Sierra Nevada, extending from Cartagena to Cadiz, and containing the Cerro Mulhacén, next to Pic Nethou, the highest point of the peninsula, 11,151

Spain is rich in minerals, especially mercury, iron, copper, and lead. The celebrated gold and silver mines of the time of the Romans have long been abandoned, but mercury is extracted in great abundance from the mines of Almaden. Lead forms an important branch of mining industry. Coal is found chiefly in the Asturias, the richest coal-field occurring on the E. of the mountains overlying the Devonian strata, copper, tin, zinc, antimony, arsenic, and cobalt, are common, and rock salt is abundant in the hills of Cardena. The principal rivers of Spain are from E. to W., the Tago, Guadiana, Guadalquivir, Duero, Tago, Guadiana, and Guadalquivir, flowing mostly through Portugal W. and S. to the Atlantic. The N. slope has only the Salado, the Ebro, and some mountain streams. The chief tributaries are the Tago, the Guadiana, which joins the Duero; the Manzanarez, which passes Madrid, and joins the Tago; the Jarama, an affluent of the Tago. The Aragon, Gallaigo, and Segura, affluents of the Ebro, and the Guadalquivir. Few of these are navigable, and those only for small boats near their mouths. The only lakes or lagoons of Spain are the Albufera in Valencia, and the Mar Mayor in Murcia. The coasts of Spain, which have an extent of 1,900 m., are in general little indented, except in the N.W. The chief coasts are Finisiera on the N.W., and Trafalgar on the S.W., in the Atlantic, Gibraltar, Gata, Palos, and Cruz, in the Mediterranean; Peñes and Ortiga, in the Bay of Biscay. The climate of Spain varies exceedingly with elevation and position; it is warm on the coasts; the table-lands are exposed to great heat in summer, and extreme cold in winter. Many of the mountains rise above the snow line, the limit of which, in the Pyrenees, is 8,953 feet; in the Sierra Nevada, 11,100 feet. Mean annual temperature at Madrid 68°·2, Fahr. The annual fall of rain on the Sierra Nevada, and on the N. and W. coasts, is 25 to 35 inches, while on the table-land of Castile it is only 10 inches, and the capital is often exposed to severe drought. Winter is the rainy season. The most noxious winds are the solano (the arcecco of Italy), a hot wind from the E., and the gallego, a cold wind from the mountains of Galicia. Frost is often severe during the night in winter. Earthquakes are sometimes felt in the south. The soil is generally fertile, except in the elevated and arid districts of the central provs.; the chief crops are wheat, maize, barley, rice, hemp, and flax. The amount of corn is often insufficient for home consumption. The wines of Spain are highly valued; the principal growths are those of Xeres (sherry), Ecta, Malaga, Albacete, Malvasia, and Val de Peñias; the other products are soda (from marine plants), honey, wax, and silk, the latter very abundant in the S.E. provs. In the S. provs. the sugar cane and cotton have been acclimatised, and there the orange and citron grow in great abundance. The best building timber grows in the N. coast; the cork tree, the kermes oak, and the samach tree, yield valuable products. The horses of Andalusia are celebrated; the mules and asses are remarkable for beauty and size. Cattle are of good breeds. The race of sheep, called the merino, yields a great quantity of excellent wool; their exportation has always been prohibited, their pasturage is regulated by ancient laws, and their number is reckoned at 5,000,000 or 6,000,000. Goats are very abundant in the table-lands; the chamois is found in the Pyrenees; and the bear, wolf, wild cat, marten, and lynx, in the different mountains. Fish is not plentiful in the rivers, but abundant on the Atlantic coasts. Its manufacturing industry, formerly flourishing, has greatly declined; the government has still manufactures of saltpetre, gunpowder, cannon, and firearms, tobacco, porcelain, and glass, but they are mostly in decay; and the celebrated manufacture of swords at Toledo is nearly extinguished. The other manufactures are of silks, cottons, woollens, and leather. Cutlery, iron, and copper goods, are made chiefly in Biscay. There are no good public roads in Spain, except those around Madrid; wheel carriages are little used, and much of the transport is effected by means of mules. There are several canals, many of them on a magnificent scale, but mostly unfinished and unfit for navigation; the chief of these are the Imperial Canal, commenced by Charles V., extending along the right bank of the Ebro; the canal of Castile, Manzanares, Murcia, Albacete, and Guadarrama. The only railways in operation are from Melara to Barcelona, from Madrid to Ariza, and from Valencia to Alcala. Others are projected from Madrid to the frontiers of France and Portugal, and from Santander to Alar del Rey, at the commencement of the Canal of Castile. From the extent of its coast line, its numerous ports, its geographical position and natural products, Spain possesses greater commercial advantages than any other country in Europe, but smuggling is so extensively carried on as to render it impossible to estimate the amount of its foreign commerce; the principal exports are wool, wine, brandy, oil, fruits, iron, lead, mercury, and salt, with a small amount of silk and manufactured goods. Imports colonial goods, dried fish, and salted provisions, butter, cheese, rice, cotton and woollen goods, cutlery, glass, and building timber.

The present inhabitants of Spain are descendants of the ancient Iberians, or of other races who colonised it at different periods. Four primitive families are discernible—I. the Spaniards, descendants of the original races, and of Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Goths, and Alans, comprising 19-20ths of the population.—II. the Basques 1-24th.—III. the Moors, descendants of the conquerors who ruled for seven centuries in the S. of the peninsula, 1-200th.—IV. the Gitanos, or gypsies, 1-250th. The Jewish race has disappeared from Spain since the expulsion of the Jews in 1492.

The government, since 1833, is a constitutional representative monarchy; the religion exclusively Roman Catholic. In 1861 there were 10 universities, 10 normal schools of the first class, 23 elementary normal schools supported by government, besides other public schools, with a total of 839,182 pupils, or about 1 in 16 of the pop. Army (1868) 200,000 men. Navy, 2 ships of the line of 86 guns; 4 frigates, & several small vessels, in all 82, of which 37 are steamers, carrying in all 887 guns. Public revenue (1864) 1,471,147,804 reals; expenditure, 1,474,202,522 reals; national debt (1861) 13,904,358,565 reals. The peninsula, now forming the kingdoms of Spain and Portugal, was first visited by the Phœnicians, and afterwards by the Carthaginians, who here formed several establishments. It was conquered by the Romans after a resistance of two centuries; they divided it into three great provinces, viz., Taracensis in the E. N., and centre, Bætica in the S., and Lusitania in the W. The Visigoths overran the country in the 6th century, and were driven from most of it by the Arabs in 711. The kingdom of Portugal was founded in 1095. During 8 centuries the Christian princes were engaged in continual warfare with the Mohammedans. From this state the country was delivered under Ferdinand and Isabella, by the conquest of Granada, in 1492. This was followed by the pillage and expulsion of the Jews, who had possessed themselves of most of the commercial riches of the country. In the same year Columbus discovered the new world, and Spain became mistress of the greater part of America as then known. Of these vast colonial possessions, Spain has now only the islands of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and part of the Virgin Islands, in the West Indies; the Philippine, Marianne, and Caroline Islands, and the Island Palao, in the Pacific; the Canary Islands, in the Atlantic; and the island of Annabon, in the Gulf of Guinea; and Ceuta, Gomera, and part of Melilla, places used for the transportation of convicts, in Barbary: the pop. of which, added to that of Spain proper, raises the gross amount to 18,064,000. From the 16th century, Spain was divided into large provinces, having nearly the title of kingdom, but by a royal decree of April 1833 it was partitioned into 49 smaller provinces, each bearing the name of its cap., except Navarra and the three Basque provinces, which remains unchanged, and possess peculiar privileges. Napoleon I. attempted to place his brother on the throne of Spain, but he was driven out of the peninsula chiefly by the British army under Wellington. Since then there have been repeated civil wars and insurrections.

W.N.W. Edinburgh. Area of pa., partly in co. Clackmannan, 200 ac. Pop. 10,180; do. of parl. bor. 12,837; do. of town 9,361. It stands on the S.E. declivity of an abrupt basaltic hill, up which a spacious main street leads to the ancient castle, whence a view is obtained of the windings of the river Forth. Its streets generally present the appearance of modernised antiquity, being interspersed with many residences of the old Scottish nobles. The castle, of the origin of which nothing is known, was a favourite residence of James V., and contains the palace and the parliament house built by him, but now used as barracks. The old Gothic church in which James V. was crowned, the West Church, and numerous other places of worship; the remains of several ancient ecclesiastical edifices, and of an unfinished palace, begun in 1570 by the Regent Earl of Mar; Cowan's and other hospitals, the town-hall, athensium, with a spire 120 feet in height, corn exchange, gaol, office of the Bank of Scotland; the old walls and bridges are amongst the most conspicuous structures. Stirling has a grammar and other endowed schools, public libraries and reading-rooms, a mechanics' institute, and several branch banks. Vessels of 70 tons only can reach its quays; but it has an extensive coasting and export trade in wool sent to England, and in the products of its manufs., which comprise tartans, shawls, some cotton stuffs, ropes, malt, leather, and soap. The dyeing of yarns, woollen cloths, silks, and other fabrics, is extensive. Imports consist chiefly of timber, coals, bricks, tiles, lime, and large quantities of corn. It communicates by railway with Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Perth. Steamers ply to and from Granton Pier, near Edinburgh, and canal passage boats to Glasgow. The borough unites with Dunfermline, Culross, Inverkeithing, and South Queensferry, in sending 1 member to House of Commons. Near to the town in 1314, was fought the famous battle of Bannockburn.

STIRLINGSHIRE, an inland co. of Scotland, extending almost across the isthmus between the Friths of Clyde and Forth, having N. the co. Perth, W. Loch Lomond, S. the cos. Dumbarton and Lanark, E. SUMANAP, a town of the island Madura.

SUMATRA, the most W. of the Sunda Islands, Asiatic Archipelago, and next to Borneo, the largest in the E. Seas, between lat. 5° 40' N. and 6° S., lon. 95° 20' and 100° E., separated N.E. from the Malay peninsula by the Strait of Malacca, having E. the Java Sea and the Strait of Sunda, separating it from the island of Java, and on other sides the Indian Ocean. Length, N.W. to S.E., 1,100 m.; breadth 60 to 240 m. Area has been estimated at from 128,000 to 130,000 sq. m.; pop. very vaguely at from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000, mostly Malays, but partly of the Papuan Negro race, with Moors in the N.W., and Dutch and other foreigners. Several mountain chains run through its interior, nearer its S.W. than N.E. coast, and rising near the equator to 14,000 or 15,000 feet in elevation. The E. half of the island is mostly level or undulating, and along the coasts there are many sandy and marshy plains traversed by the Siak, Jadrageri, Jambi, Palembang, and other rivers of large size, but which have been little explored by Europeans. Climate in the plains is less oppressive than might have been expected; at mid-day the thermometer usually ranges between 82° and 85°, sometimes rising to 88°; but at sunrise not more than 70°, Fahr. Thick fogs, thunder storms, and water spouts off the coast are frequent. Much of the island is occupied by dense forests. Products consist of rice, sago, millet, cocoa nuts, betel, sugar cane, an abundance of tropical fruits, turmeric, ginger, coffee, rattans, scented wood, teak and other timber, and the European colonists successfully cultivate the vine; but the principal articles of export are pepper to about 1,000,000 lbs. yearly, gold-dust, copper ore, sulphur, camphor, in the N.; nutmegs, cloves, and mace, in the Dutch territory of Sembooken; and coral, benzoin, gutta serena, tin, in Palembang and Menangkabow; many of which articles are brought by natives from the interior, and bartered at the ports for Indian and European manufactured goods; tools, iron, coal of inferior quality, and naphtha, are amongst the mineral products. Buffalo are the most important live stock; the breed of horses is small but hardy, swine, and goats are both domestic and wild; the elephant, rhinoceros, tiger, bear, deer, etc., roam in the forests, and the hippopotamus and crocodile are met with in the rivers. The inhabitants build their houses on posts, and adopt other usages of ultra-Gangaic nations; they manufacture gold and silver filigree work with great skill, also silk and cotton fabrics, earthenware, arms, and domestic goods generally; from Palembang lacquered basins, cane boxes, and rattan mats of the best quality are exported to Singapore, and it is said that cannon were formerly cast at Achien in the N.W.; which territory is, however, peopled by a race of Moorish descent. Imports, besides manuf. goods already mentioned, are opium and salt from India, coarse porcelain, iron wares, gold thread from China, striped cottons, spices, krises and other weapons from Java, Celebes, and other islands of the archipelago. The island is divided amongst a number of native states, the chief being Achien, Menangkabow in the central mountain region, Batak, Siak, Jambi, Palembang, Lampong along the E. from N. to S., mostly under the supremacy of the Dutch, who possess the settlements Bencoolen and Padang, on the west coast.

SUMBAWA, one of the Sunda Islands, Asiatic Archipelago, between lat. 5° and 9° S., lon. 116° 50' to 119° 10' E., separated W. ward from Lombok by the Strait of Allassa, and E. from Comodo by Sapo Strait. Length 160 m., breadth 20 to 60 m. It is nearly divided into two portions by a deep bay off its N. coast, having at E. side of entrance the volcano of Tomboro, 9,000 feet in elevation, the eruptions of which have been most violent and destructive, especially in 1815. Soil of great fertility. Products comprise rice, which is exported in large quantities, tobacco, sapan teak, and other timber, wax, edible birds' nests, ulire, gold dust, pearls, sulphur, and excellent ponies. Imports opium, Indian piece goods, and European manufactures, chiefly brought to it by the Dutch, who have a small establishment at Bimah, on a noble bay of the N. coast.—Sumbawa, a town on the N. coast of the island, 100 m. W. Bimah, is in lat. 8° 20' S., lon. 117° 30' E. It has a good harbour, and is the residence of a chief, subject to the sultan of Bimah.

SUNDA ISLES, Asiatic Archipelago, comprise Sumatra, Java, Bali, Lombok, Flores, and the other isls. of the same chain as far E. as Timor, and separate the seas of Java and Flores, with the rest of the Asiatic Archipelago, from the Indian Ocean.—The Strait of Sunda is a passage between the islands Sumatra and Java, from the Indian Ocean into the Sea of Java. Breadth 70 to 90 miles.

SUNDAY ISLAND, Pacific Ocean, is a lofty and rugged island, lat. 29° 12' S., lon. 175° 15' W.

SUNDAY RIVER, South Africa, Cape Colony, dries. Graaf-Reynet and Uitenhage, rises in the Saeewberge, flows S.E., and enters Algoa Bay, 18 m. N.E. Port Elizabeth, after a course of 200 miles. It receives numerous small affluents, and the tide rises in it to 15 miles from the sea, but a bar at its mouth impedes navigation, and it has a rapid current.

SUNDHARUNA, a maritime tract of British India, forming a cluster of small marshy islands, separated by narrow channels, having in some places fresh, and in other places brackish water, pred. Bengal, extending from the mouth of the Hoogly, lat. 21° 40' N., lon. 86° 3' E., to Rabanabad Island, lat. 22° N., lon. 90° 30' E.; length 168 m., breadth 74 m. Area 6,500 sq. m. These islands have been formed by the deposition of earth washed down by the Ganges during its periodical inundations. The waters of the Ganges enter the Bay of Bengal by 14 principal channels, which are sufficiently deep to admit the largest coasting vessels, but so narrow that their rigging frequently becomes entangled with the trees on their banks. In 1833 the island of Sengor was submerged during a violent gale. Vigorous efforts are being made for clearing these islands, which are a harbour for tigers and other ferocious animals, besides engendering a deadly malaria; and being contiguous to Calcutta, government holds out great inducements for settlers. A large portion being cleared, rice, indigo, sugar-cane, the mulberry tree for feeding silk-worms, and honey, are extensively produced. Calcutta is well supplied with fish from its numerous channels and water-courses, the taking of which is attended with danger to the fishermen, from the great number of large and fierce alligators which here abound.

SUNDERLAND, a parl., munic. bor., seaport town, and pa. of England, at the mouth of the Wear, in the North Sea, co. and 18 m. N.E. Durham, with which city, and with Shields, Gateshead, Hartlepool, and other places in the co., it is connected by a network of railways. Lat. of light on N. of two piers which enclose its harbour, 54° 54' 5" N., lon. 1° 22' W. Area of pa. 120 ac. Pop. 19,056. Area of bor., which comprises also Bishop-Wearmouth on the S., and Monk-Wearmouth and Southwick on the N. bank of the river, 5,085 ac. Pop. 67,204. The town-proper of Sunderland occupies a peninsula between the expansion of the Wear and the sea. Bishop-Wearmouth, on its W. side, communicates with Monk-Wearmouth shore by a cast-iron bridge of one arch, 236 feet in span, and 100 feet above the Wear at low water. Principal edifices, two pa. churches, numerous chapels, the exchange, atheneum, theatre, assembly rooms, barracks, custom-house, excise office, infirmary, and various almshouses. It has a mechanics' institute, horticultural and polytechnic societies. The bor. is well paved, lighted, and supplied with water. The harbour is defended by batteries, and connected with it is a large wet dock. This is one of the principal ports of England for the shipment of coal; it has, besides, a large export of lime to Yorkshire and Scotland, and of glass, earthenware, rope, chemical products, made in the town and vicinity, in and around which are also flax and saw mills, and grindstone quarries. At the adjacent village of Deptford is a steam rope factory. Mercantile ship-building is extensively carried on. Principal imports, flour, wine, tobacco, spirits, timber, tallow, iron, and flax. The town is frequented as a bathing place. Sunderland sends two members to House of Commons.

SURAT, a city of British India, presid. Bombay, cap. dist., on the south bank of the Taptee, 40 m. from its mouth in the Gulf of Cambay, and 150 m. N. Bombay. Pop. 132,544. The town proper, 6 m. in circumference, is enclosed, except facing the river, by a semicircular wall flanked by towers; it is poorly built, but outside the wall are some good European houses; and Surat has a fort garrisoned by European troops, an English church and school, European cemetery, numerous Hindoo schools, and a Hindoo hospital for sick animals of all kinds. It is the seat of a high court for the presidency, and the residence of a British military commandant and other authorities. Its manufactures of woven goods, formerly famous, have declined, but it still has an active export trade, and sends large quantities of cotton to Bombay. The town has often suffered severely from inundations of the Taptee. Amongst its inhabitants are many Parsees, the descendants of the ancient Persian fire-worshippers, who were expelled from Persia by the Mohammedans. The English factory, founded here in 1613, was the first mercantile establishment of the East India Company in the Mogul dominions. The district of Surat has an area of 1,629 sq. m., and a pop. of 492,684.

It receives several affluents, and is navigable in most part of its course to the base of the mountains, and for large ships to about 30 m. from the sea. Banks in general densely wooded; below Paramaribo they are laid out in plantations. Its entrance is defended by the forts New Amsterdam and Zelandia.

SURREY, a pa. of England, co. Norfolk, 5 m. E.S.E. Norwich. Area 1,740 ac. Pop. 467.

SUSSEX or SUNAR (Saxon Suth-rica, "the South Kingdom"), an inland co. of England, having N. the Thames, separating it from Middlesex and Bucks, S. Sussex, E. Kent, and W. Hants and Berks. Area 759 sq. m., or 485,760 ac., of which more than 4-5ths are under culture. Pop. 683,082. The N. Downs, of which the Hog's Back and Boxhill form portions, intersect the co. from W. to E., dividing it into two parts; the N. of these has a fertile and diversified slope to the Thames; the S. is again partially divided by a steep range of sandy hills (Hindhead, Hascomb, and Leith Hill), having the vales of Godalming, Albury, and Dorking, on the N., and on the S. the Weald, a rich tract continuous with the Weald of Sussex and Kent. An expanse of wild heath-land covers all the W. of the co., and the S.W. hill-chain, where Leith Hill rises to nearly 1,000 feet above the sea, and commands a view over parts of 14 cos. In the vales and the N. there is a good deal of fertile soil; the N.E. quarter is wholly occupied by suburbs of London. A large portion of the soil is under tillage, but agriculture is backward. Hops of the first quality are raised at Farnham, medicinal plants about Mitcham, and in the N. a great deal of land is in gardens for the supply of vegetables to the London markets. Woods are numerous and extensive; swine and poultry are plentifully reared. Except in Southwark, Lambeth, and elsewhere near London, manufactures are of little importance. The only river of consequence is the Wey, forming a part of the River and Arundel Canal to Guildford. The Basingstoke Canal is in the N.W., and the "E., S.W." Brighton, Croydon, and Richmond Railways from London; and the Reading and Reigate Railways traverse the co. Surrey is in the home circuit, and forms an arch-deaconry of the diocese of Winchester. Lent assizes are held at Kingston, and summer assizes at Croydon and Guildford alternately. It returns 11 members to the House of Commons, of whom 4 are for the co. Reg. electors (1848) for E. division 6,028, for W. division 3,778. Besides Guildford, the cap., it contains the par. bors Southwark, Lambeth, and Reigate, and the towns Kingston-on-Thames, Wandsworth, Croydon, Epsom, Ewell, Dorking, Godalming, and Chertsey. Under the Saxon heptarchy, it chiefly formed a part of the kingdom of Sussex.

SUSQUEHANNA, a co. of the U. S., North America, in N.E. of Pennsylvania. Area 712 sq. m. Pop. 26,088.

SUSSEX (Suth-seare, "the South Saxons"), a maritime co. of England, bordering the English Channel from Selsey to Rye, having W. Hampshire, and N. Surrey and Kent. Area 1,466 sq. m., or 938,240 ac. Pop. 338,844. The South Downs, a range of chalk-hills covered by fine turf, continuous with the Downs of Hants near Petersfield, traverse the co. Eward to Beachy Head, where they terminate on the English Channel in a lofty cliff. N. this chan., extending to the hills of Surrey, is a fertile and richly timbered tract, termed the Weald, and which was anciently the forest of Anderida, it having been famous for its woods from time immemorial. Between the Downs and the sea is a good deal of fertile soil, as also in the marsh lands E. of Beachy Head. Principal rivers, the Arun, Rother, Ouse, and Adur, all small, and flowing S. to the Channel. Climate mild, and harvests early; but agriculture is rather backward. Farms in the Weald are mostly small; on the Downs they often vary from 1,200 to 2,000 acres; wheat, oats, barley, and turnips are principal crops. In the E. many hags are raised. The black-faced South-down sheep, and the Sussex cattle are breeds in high repute. Swine, fowls, and rabbits, are sent in large numbers to market. Limestone, charcoal, salt, gunpowder manufactured at Battle, potash, bricks, and earthenwares, are other principal products; and in the small towns, along the coast, some ship-building is carried on; but the trade is chiefly in rural produce. The Guildford, Arundel, and Chichester Canal intersects the W. and S. of the co., which is also traversed in length and breadth by the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway. County revenue (1848) 19,868. Sussex is divided into 6 rapes, is in the home-circuit, and composes the diocese of Chichester; besides which city, its cap., it contains the parishes of Brighton, Lewes, New Shoreham, Hastings, Horsham, Arundel, and Rye, with the towns E. Grinstead, Winchelsea, Petworth, Cuckfield, Battle, Worthing, etc. Most of the towns on its coast are resorted to as favourite watering-places in summer. Assizes are held in Lent at Horsham, in summer and winter at Lewes. With its bors. it sends 17 members to H. of C., 4 of whom are returned for the co. Reg. electors (1848) for E. division 5,503; for W. division 3,453. It composed, with a great part of Surrey, the second kingdom erected by the Saxons in England; its antiquities are not, however, numerous, and are mostly of the Roman period.

SUTHERLAND, a highland maritime co. of Scotland, near its N. extremity, extending from the sea, between cos. Ross and Caithness, having N. and W. the Atlantic Ocean, E. Caithness and Moray Firth, and S. the Firth of Dornoch, and cos. Ross and Cromarty. Area 1,901 sq. m., or 132,560 ac. Pop. 26,793. Surface, excepting along the E. shore, rugged and mountainous, and interspersed with morasses and deer forests. Principal rivers, the Oikel, Fleet, Broa, and Helmsdale, valuable for their salmon fishings. Principal lakes, Lochs Shin, Hope, Laoghal, Assynt, More, and Naver. The arable soil along the E. coast has been well enclosed and drained, and extensive agricultural improvements have been effected. Chief employment, sheep and cattle breeding, especially the former. The breeds of sheep are excellent, and about 220,000 are annually exported to the south. Ptarmigan, grouse, blackcock, Alpine-hares, etc., are abundant. Farms large, especially sheep farms, in the mountainous districts; of medium size in the E. Average rent of land 7d. per acre. Lime and freestone are obtained. Manufactures, except in a very restricted sense, are unknown. The trade of the county consists chiefly in the exchange of sheep, wool, cattle, and fish, for woven fabrics and other manufactured goods, and colonial produce. The herring fishery is successfully carried on, both on the E. and W. coasts, chiefly at Helmsdale. The co. is subdivided into 14 pas. Principal town Dornoch. It sends 1 member to House of Commons. Registered electors (1848) 191.

The Scandinavian Alps traverse the country in the W., and separate it from Norway; many of their summits are constantly snow-clad. [Norway.] From this mountain region the country slopes E. to the Gulf of Bothnia, forming in its descent two elevated table-lands, the 1st or W. most is 2,000 feet, and the E. most 360 to 800 feet above the sea. The tract of country bordering the Baltic is under 300 feet in elevation. The greater part of the surface is flat, the S. portion constitutes the plain of Scania. A line is supposed to traverse the country in lat. 56° 8' N., north of which to Cape North the land is gradually rising at the estimated rate of 4 feet in a century, while S. of it there is a slow and gradual subsidence. The country is watered by numerous streams, none of which are large; the principal are, from N. to S., the Tornea, Lulea, Pitea, Umea, Angermann, and the Dal-elv, which flow N.E. to the Gulf of Bothnia, and the Motals, which traverses Lake Wetter to the Baltic. Nearly one-eighth of the superficies is covered by lakes, some of which are very extensive. The largest are Wener, Wetter, and Mäler, all in the S. provs.; they afford great advantages for navigation; these lakes are connected by canals, the chief of which are those of Södertelge, Trölkhatta, Hiellmar, Strömsholm, and Gotha. There are extensive marshy tracts along the shores. The coast, which has a development of 1,400 miles, is deeply indented, forming vast bays and fjords, and studded with a multitude of low sandy isles, the chief of which are Gothland and Oeland in the Baltic. The climate of Sweden is mild for its northern position, the mean temperature of the year at Stockholm being 42° 2 Fahr. The W. coasts are more mild and moist than the E. coasts. The summers are very hot, and the winters extremely cold. Spring is almost unknown. N. of lat. 61° mercury often freezes. In the N. the rivers are frozen, and snow covers the ground for five or six months in the year; in the central regions water lasts for three or four months. The amount of rain is much less than in Norway. The prevailing winds are S.W. and W. The soil is not generally fertile, and the corn produced was formerly only about two-thirds of that required; but from the great improvements in agriculture introduced by the government within the present century, and the general introduction of the potato, the produce is now adequate to the consumption. Barley is cultivated as far N. as lat. 65°, but the crops frequently fail. Rye, hemp, and potatoes are grown to lat. 60° N. Oats ripen to 63° 30', wheat and hops cease to be cultivated with advantage beyond lat. 62° N. Fruit trees, except the cherry, are limited to the S. of lat. 60°. One-fourth of the surface is covered with forests, but the produce of timber is small, much is used for fuel, and made into charcoal for use in the mines. There are few woods to the N. of lat. 64° N. The principal trees are the pine, fir, and birch, which extend to the extreme N. of the country, the lime, elm, ash, willow, and alder between lat. 61° and 63° N., the oak to lat. 61°, and the beech to lat. 61°. Tar and pitch are extracted from the roots of the pine. Rearing of live stock is an important branch of industry, but the pastures are poor, horses and cattle small, and the sheep yield an inferior wool. N. of lat. 64°, the reindeer is the only domestic animal. Among wild animals are the bear, which, however, is scarce, the wolf, lynx, fox, marten, lemming, hare, and squirrel. Fish are abundant on the coasts, and in the lakes and rivers; the herring fishery has greatly declined, but lobsters are exported, and salmon are caught in all the principal rivers. The mining districts of Sweden, mostly in the central provs., extend over 18,000 sq. m., the chief products are iron, which is distributed over nearly all the country, but the best is found in the län Upsala; the annual produce of all the mines is about 70,000 tons of bar iron; in 1848, 31,411 tons were exported to Great Britain. The richest copper mines are at Fahlun; the annual produce in all is about 1,000 tons. Gold is not now sought for, and silver is procured only to a small extent. The other mineral products are cobalt, lime, coal of inferior quality, and porphyry. Manufactures are chiefly confined to articles of domestic use; the principal are woollens, sugar, tobacco, paper, linens, cotton (in small quantity); tanning is an important branch of industry. Ship-building is carried on to some extent in the ports of the Baltic. Distilling and brewing are extensively prosecuted. The internal commerce of Sweden is considerable, and Swedish vessels visit most of the Atlantic ports of South America, and the Mediterranean. Government is a constitutional monarchy. The established religion is Lutheran, but all sects are tolerated. Education is widely diffused, and well conducted in gymnasia, high and burgher schools. It has been stated that there is not one person in 1,000 who cannot read and write. There are universities at Upsala and Lund. Army (1853) 144,013 men. Navy, 10 ships of the line, 8 frigates, 8 brigs, 12 steamers, and 299 small vessels. In 1397, by the treaty of Calmar, the crown of Sweden was united to those of Denmark and Norway by Margaret of Denmark. The Swedes recovered their independence under Gustavus Vasa in 1521. The House of Vasa ascended the throne in 1523, and gave to Sweden the celebrated Gustavus Adolphus. It was succeeded by the House of Deux-Ponts, which furnished the famous Charles XII.; to this succeeded the Houses of Hessen-Cassel and Holstein-Gottorp. In 1810, Marshal Bernadotte of France was chosen crown prince, and ascended the throne as Charles-John XIV. in 1818. Norway was annexed to Sweden in 1814, retaining its own laws. 88 m. of railway were opened in 1858. [Norway.]

these are traversed by steam-boats. The table land contains Lakes Morat, Bormio, Baldegg, Halwy, Greifensee, and Pfäfers. In the Jura are the lakes of Neuchâtel and Bienné, the former traversed by steam-boats. The climate of Switzerland, owing to its elevation and other causes, is much more severe than might be expected from its position, nearly in mid-distance between the equator and the North Pole. It presents the greatest extremes and the most violent contrasts. In Geneva, at an elevation of 1,230 feet, the mean pressure of the barometer is 27 inches; the thermometer ranges from 34° to 66° Fahr., and the average annual amount of rain is 29 inches. On Mount St Bernard, barometer 21 inches, thermometer 18° to 43° Fahr., and amount of rain 61 inches. The elevation of the lower limit of snow in the mountains is 8,900 feet. On the table land, and in the lower mountains snow falls in greater abundance than in other countries of the same lat. in Europe. On St Gothard snow falls at least once a month in summer. The large lakes are seldom frozen. In the upper valleys of the Jura winter lasts six months; it is longer in those of the Alps. S.W. winds, which are frequent, usually bring rain; the N.E. wind, which blows on the table land in spring, is cold and dry. The warm S. wind greatly favours the climate of the canton Ticino; under the name of Föhn, the sirocco of the Alps, it blows with extreme violence, and causes great damage on the lakes. At an elevation of from 1,000 to 2,600 feet, the climate is pure and salubrious; but it is unhealthy in many of the deep and narrow valleys. Vegetation corresponds with the extremes of climate. In the Valais, the fig and grape ripen at the foot of ice-clad mountains, while near their summits the rhododendron and the lichen grow at the limit of the snow line. The corn raised in Switzerland is not nearly sufficient for the supply of its pop.; the most productive cantons are those of the N. and W. Here the vine ripens at an elevation of 1,900, and in some places at 2,100 feet above the sea. It is cultivated on the slopes of the Jura, and in the valleys of the Rhine, Rhone, Reuss, Lemane, and Thur. Buckwheat ripens at an elevation of 2,200 feet, and with a S. exposure at 3,000 feet; barley, rye, potatoes, and pot herbs at 4,000 feet. Flax and hemp are extensively grown; irrigation is judiciously managed; and in general, agriculture is making considerable progress. The slopes of the Jura, and of the Alps, and the high regions of the table-land, are covered with valuable timber trees, the oak, beech, larch, and birch. The pine grows to an elevation of 6,700 feet, shrubs to 7,400 feet. The principal wealth of Switzerland consists in its rich and excellent pastures, which in summer support vast numbers of cattle; the finest breeds are those of the Simmenthal, Gersau, Gruyère, Zug, and Schwytz. There were in 1844, 858,000 horned cattle, about one-fourth of which were milch cows; 106,000 horses, 469,000 sheep, 347,000 goats, and 818,000 swine. The silk worm is reared in the valleys S. of the Alps, and of late also in the N. The forests abound in game, the lammergeyer inhabits the highest mountains, and the chamois is hunted in the Valais and in the Oberland. Fish of excellent quality is abundant in the lakes and the rivers. Iron is found in the mountains generally, but chiefly in the Jura; there are mines of lead, and zinc, in the Grisons. Turf is abundant in the marshy districts, and coal is found in the table-land. The principal salt springs are at Bex, in the valley of the Rhone. Switzerland contains upwards of 300 mineral springs, 18 bath establishments of the first, and 166 of the second class. The cultivation of the vine is an important branch of industry in the S.W. cantons, and wine is exported. Kirschwasser, elder, and perry, are made. Cheese is a valuable product; it is made chiefly in Gersau, the Simmenthal, and the Emmenthal; that called Gruyère is highly valued, and extensively exported. Switzerland has made rapid progress in manufacturing industry. The E. and N.E. cantons manufacture cotton goods, the chief seats of which are Appenzell and St Gall. Silks are woven in Zurich and Basle, and linens at Bern. Neuchâtel has superior printing establishments. Watches, jewellery, and musical boxes, are the principal manufactures of the W. cantons; here 236,000 watches are made every year. The number of individuals employed in the different branches of industry in 1846, were—silks, 40,000; cottons, 90,000; watches and jewellery, 30,000; woollens, paper, and leather, ironware, etc., 40,000. In winter the pop. of the Alps inhabit villages scattered over the lower valleys. In May, the cattle are led to the lower pastures; in July, they ascend to regions 6,000 feet above the sea; and about the 10th August they pasture on the highest mountains, whence they descend to the valleys about the 10th October. 310 miles of railway were opened in 1858.

The principal races inhabiting the country are the Teutonic and the Celtic. The German language is spoken in a variety of patois, by 1,676,000 of the pop. in the N. and E. French is spoken in the Jura, and on the table-land W. of the Lakes of Bienné and Morat, and of the river Sarine, in part of the Valais, and the Alps in its vicinity, by about 474,000 Swiss. S. of the Alps, Italian is the language of 133,300 Swiss; the Romansh is spoken in the Engadine, and in the valleys of the Rhine by about 42,500 of the pop. The inhabitants of the Alps are mostly Roman Catholics. In the Jura, and on the table-land, Protestants are most numerous. In 1850 there were 1,417,734 Protestants, and 971,840 Roman Catholics. Switzerland has three universities, at Basle, Bern, and Zurich. Public instruction is widely disseminated, and in the Protestant cantons Sunday and infant schools are on the increase. In 1844 there were in all 5,500 primary schools, attended by 350,000 pupils, or the 7th part of the population. The Swiss Confederation is composed of 22 cantons, forming 25 independent states, united in a perpetual league. The central and W. part was called Helvetia by the Romans, and the E. part, or the Grisons, Rætia. The Confederation was founded 1st January 1308, by the 3 cantons Uri, Schwytz, and Unterwalden. In 1353 it numbered 8 cantons, and in 1513 it was composed of 13 cantons. This old Confederation, of 13 cantons, was increased by the adherence of several subject territories, and existed till 1798, when it was replaced by the Helvetic Republic, which lasted four years. In 1803 Napoleon I. organized a new Confederation, composed of 19 cantons, by the addition of St Gall, the Grisons, Argovia, Thurgovia, Tessin, and Vaud. This Confederation was modified in 1815; the number of cantons was increased to 27 by the admission of Valais, Neuchâtel, and Geneva. The federal government was composed of a diet, and of a Vorort, or federal directory. The general diet met every second year, alternately in Zurich, Bern, and Lucerne. By the new constitution of 1848, the federal assembly is composed of two divisions, a national council and a senate, and Bern was chosen as the federal city. Every parish supports its own poor. The army is composed of 72,000; reserve 36,000; total 108,000 men. All men capable of carrying arms are liable to be called out. Estimated public revenue (1857) 17,216,370 francs; expenditure 16,087,706 francs.

Sydney, the cap. town of the British colony of New South Wales, is built on the southern shores of Port Jackson, 7 m. from the entrance of the harbour, lat. 53° 34' S., lon. 151° 14' E. It was founded in 1788, by Captain Arthur Phillip, who had been despatched by the Imperial Government to establish a penal settlement in this remote region, and who, after first landing on 26th January of that year, at Botany Bay, and remaining a short space at that inconvenient location, soon after discovered and removed to the fine harbour of Port Jackson, that has since become so widely known in the world's commerce. Pop. (1846) 39,358; 1858, 53,354, besides about 16,000 in the suburbs. The harbour is quite land-locked, with deep water to the edge of its rocky shores. The old part of the town is fast disappearing, and giving place to a handsome city, with numerous public buildings, banks, warehouses, and elegant private residences, built of fine sandstone. The city has a mayor and municipal corporation; and there also the governor resides, and the Colonial Parliament of two houses holds its sessions. The town is lighted with gas. There are three colleges, a grammar school and in 1852 an University was established, which has since acquired, with regard to its degrees, the status of our home universities. The gold discoveries in 1851 have considerably augmented the commerce and importance of Sydney, and a branch mint has been granted by the Imperial Government, which came into work in May 1855, and has done considerable business, coining from one to one and a quarter million of gold money annually. The place is defended by several fortifications, including Pinchgut Island, a small rock artificially cut to nearly a level with the water. There is communication by telegraph with the Heads of Port Jackson to the E., and with Melbourne to a S.W., a distance of 58 miles.

Sydney, the cap. town of the British colony, Cape Breton, British North America, on a bay of the N.E. coast of the island. Lat. 46° 18' N., lon. 60° 9' W. Symi, Syme, an island off the W. coast of Asia Minor, at the entrance of the Gulf of Symi, 15 m. N.W. Rhodes. Lat. 36° 30' N., lon. 27° 54' E. Length and breadth about 6 m. each. Estimated pop. 7,000. Outline very irregular, and the island is a rocky mass of limestone rising to 1,000 feet above the sea. Soil mostly barren, but every available patch of ground is assiduously cultivated, and the inhabitants are distinguished for industry and commercial enterprise. Symi exports sponge and wood from the shores of its gulf. It has 3 harbours, and a small town of same name on its N. side, with about 1,000 inhabitants, and some remains of antiquity. Symi is subordinate to the pasha of Rhodes, who derives from it an annual revenue of 27*0*l. The Gulf of Symi (anc. Sinus Doridis), is an inlet of the Mediterranean, on the S.W. coast of Asia Minor, bounded by two long promontories, the N.W. of which (Triopium Promontory), separates it from the Gulf of Koa. Depth inland, and breadth at entrance about 27 miles each. On its E. side are three subordinate bays (the anc. Thymia, Schennus, and Babussius). Shores very picturesque, and on them are various Cyclopean and other remains. At its entrance is the island of Symi.

SYRA (Syros), an island of the Grecian Archipelago, among the Cyclades 20 m NW Paros Area about 55 sq m Estimated pop (1853) 27,000 Surface mountainous, and in its N extremity is a peak rising to 4,000 feet above the sea. Many parts of the island are fertile, producing corn, wine, silk, figs and cotton. It is with the island of Zea, Myconos, Ithura, Scyros, Siphanto, Kimolos, Milo and Sikinos, a group of Greece—Syros or Hermopolis, the cap, is a maritime town on the E shore Pop 14,000. It is built around its harbour, at the foot of a conical-shaped hill, which formed the site of the older town. The harbour is accessible to line-of-battle ships, has good anchor ground, is well sheltered on all sides, except the SE, and a light house has been erected, with a revolving light on the Sadoro island 1½ m distant SE. In 1844, 2,536 vessels, 2,211,371 burlins 179,340 tons, with cargoes valued at 5,761,2 entered its port. It is the residence of consuls of most European states, and a principal station of the Mediterranean steamers going to and from Constantinople.

SYRACUSE (ital Syracusa or Syracusa), a fortified city of the island Sicily, on the E coast, capital, and ancient in modern times occupying only the site of the original and smallest quarter of the famous city of antiquity—viz, the island of Ortygia, between the sea and the great harbour, 30 m SSE Catania Lat of lighthouse 36° 3' N, lon 15° 17' 5" E Pop, which in ancient times was said to have amounted to 200,000, is now only 14,000. The cathedral, formerly the temple of Minerva, is of Doric architecture and has been a place of worship continually for 2,500 years. The church of St Martin claims to have been the earliest in Europe for Christian worship. The catacombs and the latomæ, or ancient prisons, in the quarries from which the materials of Syracuse were taken, the "ear of Dionysius," the famous fountain of Arethusa now used for a washing-trough, the remains of the strong fortress Icthyon, of a temple of Diana, and Roman amphitheatre, some baths, walls, gates, and the palace of arts beds, constructed by Agathocles, are the chief vestiges of antiquity. The middle age citadel of Minerva barracks, a college, royal academy museum of antiquities, and public library, with numerous churches, may be chiefly noted as belonging to the modern city. The harbour is admirably adapted for a commercial emporium, but its trade is now nearly confined to a few exports of salt, wine, oil, and fish. Syracuse was founded B.C. 736, by a colony from Corinth, governed alternately as a republic or under kings, unsuccessfully besieged by the Athenians B.C. 414, and by the Carthaginians—taken by the Romans B.C. 200, and again, after a lengthened siege, in 673, by the Saracens, who partially destroyed it, but it was chiefly ruined by the earthquake of 1693. It was the residence at different periods of Plato, Simonides, Zeno, and Cicero, the place where Hieras first propounded the true revolution of the earth, and the birthplace of the poets Theocritus and Moschus, and the philosopher Archimedes, who lost his life at the capture of the city by the Romans.

SYRACUSE a town of the U.S., North America, New York, township Salina, cap co Onondaga, at the junction of the Erie and Oswego canals, and on the W railway of the state 34 m SSE Oswego Pop (1850) 22,293 (1853) 27,000. It has highly productive salt springs, and, in 1850, it had 193 salt factories, producing 5,000,000 bushels of salt.

SYRIA WITH PALESTINE, a large division of Asiatic Turkey, more or less between lat 31° and 37° N lon 34° 30' and 40° E, bounded N by the Armenian mountains, E by the Euphrates, and the Arabian desert, S by Arabia Petrea, and W by the Mediterranean sea. Estimated area 50,000 sq m Pop about 1,360,000, mostly Mohammedans but comprising about 345,000 Greek Christians, 60,000 Maronites, and Roman Catholics, 17,000 Jews, 43,000 Druses, and 17,000 Melchites and Itzch. The W coast portion, is mountainous, the E chiefly an elevated plain. The mountain ranges proceed mostly N to S, the Anti Taurus (mons Amanus) and Mount Lebanon (mc Libanus), terminate in the coast in bold headlands, as do several spurs of Anti Libanus which range in Palestine enclosing the fertile valley Cœle-Syria. The mountains are rugged, consisting of limestone overlying gneiss, with a different silurian rocks, which appear in the summits of Libanus, but at their bases are many fertile tracts in the basins of small rivers; and here are several plains of high fertility, as those of Hama in the E, Antioch and Aleppo in the N, Edessa and Sharon in the S. In the S and E granite, gneiss and dolomite mountains skirt the volcanic region of the Dead Sea, which is entered by the river Jordan, headwaters of which, the chief rivers are the Euphrates and Orontes, and the Bekas both entering the Mediterranean. After the Dead Sea, the principal lakes are those of Libanus or Gennesareth, and Hulah in the valley of the Jordan, and some smaller lakes near Damascus and Antioch. The surface being very uneven, the climate and products vary greatly within short distances. Along the coasts the heat is great, and the orange, banana, and date flourish, while the summits of the mountains are seen covered with snow. In the N, and on the elevated plain E. of the mountains, the climate is colder, but at Aleppo frosts are seldom severe, and snow rarely lies on the ground for more than a day at a time. The corn is nearly ripe early in May, and from June to September summer heats prevail, unbroken by any rain, though tempered in the W by sea breezes. The samsel, a wind like the samos of the desert, sometimes occurs at this season, and shocks of earthquakes are frequent. Heavy rains occur in spring and autumn, and the trees frequently retain their foliage till the beginning of December. Syria comprises a large extent of very productive soil. What is called the "desert," is not a sandy waste, but a region destitute of settled inhabitants and villages, yet with a surface of fine black mould, covered with rank grass and herbs, affording cover for numerous wild animals, and pasturage for many flocks and herds, fed there by water from Beidonia. It is stated that the country is capable of producing sufficient to maintain ten times its present population; yet such is the rude method of agriculture, the depressed condition and insecurity of the rural population, and the uncertainty of taxation and government regulations, that in bad years corn must frequently be imported from Egypt and elsewhere. Wheat, barley, maize, millet, lentils, and sesamum, are raised in the plains, principally in the Hauran, which has always been considered the granary of Syria. Cotton and the mulberry flourish on the coast, and silk is produced on the slopes of Lebanon. The cotton annually raised in the S. is estimated to amount in value to 350,000*l.*; and about 1,700 cantars of silk, 10,700 do. of tobacco, from 8,000 to 10,000 do. of gall nuts, and 300 do. of madder roots are annually produced. Other chief products are sheep wool, olive oil, sugar, indigo, scammony, and other gums, safflower, dates, amber, hides, and skins. Sheep and other live stock form, as in antiquity, a chief part of the wealth of the inhabitants; and all merchandise being conveyed on the backs of animals, it is estimated that the transit trade employs 80,000 beasts, and about 30,000 drivers. About 3,500 oaks of sponge fished on the coast are sent to the ports of the Mediterranean annually; other fisheries are comparatively unimportant, as is mining industry. Damascus has about 4,000 looms engaged in the manufacture of silks, and the same manufacture is carried on to a considerable extent in Aleppo. Cotton, and some woollen fabrics, shawls, gold and silver thread stuffs, are also woven there and elsewhere, and the total produce of the looms of Aleppo is estimated at 250,000*l.* in annual value. Glass, earthenware, leather, and soap, are made in the above and other towns, and in Palestine great numbers of ecclesiastical ornaments are manufactured for sale. Commerce is greatly impeded by the want of roads, those that exist being mere mule or camel tracks; also by the deficiency of good harbours. But as Syria is on the high route from Bagdad, Mosul, and Erzeroum, to Mecca, caravans annually traverse it, bringing galls, indigo, Mocha coffee, skins, Cashmere shawls, and other Indian manufactures, also the products of Asia Minor, Mesopotamia, and Persia, which are exchanged here for European manufactures, and cochineal. In 1835, the total value of the exports by sea was estimated at 807,337*l.* The value of the imports in the same year was estimated at 506,210*l.* In 1847, the imports from Great Britain comprised 14,735,064 yards of cotton fabrics, worth 317,915*l.*; cotton twist to the value of 72,881*l.*; the total value of British and Irish produce imported being 415,392*l.* Latakia, Tripoli, Beyrout, Kiarish, and Jaffa are the principal seaport towns. The trade of Syria is chiefly conducted by Christians, Jews, or Armenians. The Mohammedans are most numerous in the secondary towns, and in the rural districts. The Druses are an interesting and peculiar tribe amongst them, chiefly agricultural, but partly occupied in domestic weaving and other manufactures, and inhabiting a part of Mount Lebanon, where they live under an emir, or prince of their own race. The Maronites are also a peculiar people, dwelling in their vicinity, and having a patriarch, twelve bishops, and numerous convents. The Metawls are Mohammedans of the Persian or Shik sect; and the Yezidis, and some other tribes, are adherents of idolatrous, or heretical opinions. Syria is divided into the pashaliks of Aleppo, Damascus, and Beirut or Sidon; chief cities & towns are of same names, with Antioch, Hamah, Hama, Jerusalem, Nablous, Moslem, Saïda, and Gaza. The government is conducted in the same corrupt and extortionate manner as in the other provs. of Turkey. Public revenue, derived from taxation of every kind, is estimated at 440,000*l.* [PALESTINE.]

TABARIA, TIBERIAS or TUBARITH, a town of Palestine, pash. and 27 m. E.S.E. Acre, on the W. shore of the Lake of Tiberias. It is situated on a narrow strip of undulating land, between the lake and a mountain knot connected with Mount Tabor or Tubar; and it is enclosed landward by a strong wall flanked with towers. Previously to a disastrous earthquake in 1837, it had about 2,000 inhabitants; when visited soon afterwards by Messrs Robinson and Smith, it was found partially ruined, and miserable. Principal edifice, a castle at its N.W. extremity. Near it are some hot baths, adjacent to which is a palace, erected in 1839 by Ibrahim Pasha, during the Egyptian occupation of Syria.

TABARIA, TIBERIAS or GENNESARETH (LAKE or SEA OF), (Scripture Chinnereth), a lake of Palestine, forming a part of its E. boundary, between lat. 32° 45' and 33° 56' N., lon. 35° 36' E. Shape somewhat oval. Length 14 m.; greatest breadth 8 m.; depression below the Mediterranean 755 feet. It is traversed throughout from N. to S. by the river Jordan. Shores steep, but not precipitous. Its surface and environs derive unperishable interest from being the scenes of numerous miracles recorded in the life of Jesus Christ; and around it were anciently the cities of Tiberias, Magdala, Capernaum, Chorazim, and Bethsaida, all of which, except Tiberias, have wholly disappeared. Its vicinity presents many traces of volcanic action; and its waters are liable to be affected by sudden tempests, one of which is recorded in Holy Writ.

TABOR (MOUNT), a mountain of Palestine, pass. Area, 8 m. E. Nazareth. Elevation 1,900 feet above the adjacent plain. It is of limestone formation, highly picturesque in appearance, and commanding noble views. On it are numerous remains of ancient structures, and the Greek and Latin monks believe it to have been the scene of the Transfiguration.

TABRIZ, TABRUS or TERRIZ, a city of North

Persia, cap. prov. Azerbijan, in a plain, on a river flowing into Lake Urmia. Lat. 38° 2' N., lon. 48° 12' E. Estimated pop. 80,000. It is situated amongst forests, and is about 3½ m. in circumference, enclosed by a brick wall, and entered by 7 gates, outside of which are suburbs and fine gardens, said to occupy 30 m. in circuit. Except its citadel and the remains of a mosque, it has no edifice worthy of notice; but its bazaars and caravanserais are extensive, and it is an important entrepot of the trade between Persia, India, Russia, Constantinople, and the Black Sea. In 1840, the European goods sold in its bazaars were estimated at 1,400,000*l.* in value, and Turkish goods at 40,000*l.* It is also the seat of manufactures of silk stuffs. It was long supposed to be identical with the Cannaca or Shia of antiquity, but the site of that city has been clearly identified with Takhti-Soleiman, 125 m. S.S.E.ward. Tubris is said to have been founded in the time of Haroun-al-Raschid.
